CAPES Stand Approved

By Women Who Study Good Taste and Appropriateness in Dress

Always tuned to the times, the Coat Section now devotes a special corner to capes. That is convincing evidence of their popularity. Seems as if no wardrobe will be complete without one this Summer. Perhaps the cape you have been planning to buy is among these new models:

FULL, CIRCULAR CAPES of fine quality serge, shepherd checks or heather mixtures. Yoke effect in back. Pockets are just below the sleeve openings. Silk lined throughout. $44.75

JACKET CAPES of black or navy serge with the fullness rippling over the shoulders and a smart waistcoat in front, with pockets and button trimming. Large cape collar and sash belt. $28.75

CAPE COATEES of Black Satin, ever so smart. The front is in jacket effect with deep pockets, broad revers and buckled belt. Overcollar of white silk; white silk lining. $39.75

SPRING COATS of silvertone Velour in a simple, serviceable style with deep convertible collar, and buckled belt that fastens at the side with a large buckle. Beaver, light blue chinchilla and a pretty shade of green. $34.75

Macy's—Third Floor, Broadway.

Smart Neckwear of Double-Faced Satin

Priced Specially 74c

There's many a striking advantage in neckwear of double-faced satin:

It is perfectly reversible, identical in appearance on both sides.

As there is but a single fabric, there is no lining to pucker or overlap at the edges when laundering.

Rich and heavy in quality, it retains its freshness after washing.

These are in tuxedo effect, well shaped, also the popular gypsy ties. May be had in white, flesh, bisque, Copenhagen, rose or gray.

United States Food Administration License Number G02865.

The U. S. Food Administration advises the public to buy Pinto Beans

We have bought from the Government and will place on sale tomorrow 50,000 pounds of Pinto Beans. Experts declare them superior to Navy Beans, and they cost much less.

Farmers planted big fields of Pintos last Summer, and to insure distribution of the crop and assure increased planting this year, the Food Administration took over all the beans raised. The authorities inform us that one pound of Pinto Beans is equal in nutritive value to 1.63 pounds of sirloin steak. In flavor and palatableness they are unequalled—they are cheaper and more nutritive than navy beans.

Hotels, restaurants and dining cars are serving them. Eat Pintos and reduce the cost of living.

FORCE WITHOUT STINT OR LIMIT.

The words spoken by President WILSON last night in Baltimore will ring through the nation, lifting up the spirits of the people and strengthening them to meet whatever sacrifices the war may involve.

"Germany has once more said that "force, and force alone, shall decide "whether justice and peace shall "reign in the affairs of men," says the President. "I accept the challenge." And he did accept it in words that will hearten the fighting men at the front, that will be read with praise and thanksgiving by the chiefs of the Governments associated with us in the war:

"There is, therefore, but one response possible for us. Force, force "to the utmost, force without stint or "limit, the righteous and triumphant "force which shall make right the law "of the world and cast every selfish "dominion down in the dust." From one great nation to another these are terrible words. Ten years ago we could not have imagined them spoken by a President or applauded by the people of the United States. They are spoken, and we are to use force without stint or limit, because we wear the triple armor of justice in the quarrel. The fate of Russia, of Rumania, has shown us what Germany means when she speaks of rights and justice. The President pledges all our force, all our resources, to the prosecution of the war against her, because it is our purpose to see to it that justice, as we understand it, not justice in the German sense, shall reign among men and nations.

THE SECOND YEAR OF WAR.

When the first year of America's participation in the war ended, her soldiers were fighting with French and British troops in Picardy to check the advance of German armies in the greatest battle the world had ever seen. One hundred thousand Americans had come to the relief of the hard-pressed veterans of PÉTAIN and HAIG, whose forces at every point of contact were outnumbered by the enemy, who was also stronger in artillery.

If a critic of our military preparations asks what America did in her first year of war that was of material assistance to her allies, he can be directed to the battlefields of France for evidence of her good faith, and he can be told that America has placed all her wealth and resources at the service of liberty and civilization and has been methodically organizing victory. Without America's help on a vast scale there can be no victory for the democratic nations. She is lending billions of dollars to her exhausted allies; she is spending billions of dollars on her own army and navy; she is building a great merchant fleet that her allies may be fed and continue in the fight to the end; she is devoting to the common cause all her manhood; she is staking her independence and all her traditions, all she holds dear, on the issue.

Never has a nation waged war so unselfishly, or consecrated itself to a more exalted purpose. FRANKLIN once wrote that "there was never a good war or a bad peace." This war, in which there will be no discharge until a good peace is won, confounds the philosopher. America asks nothing as her reward but the assurance, to be wrung from the modern Attila and his hordes, that the principles of right and justice shall prevail, that men shall be free, and that wars shall cease.

In the beginning of the second year of war for America she may look back on achievements in arming herself, astounding for a nation that had never ls inconsiderable and diminishing every day. Some of our people are more than 3,000 miles away from the most horrid and desolating conflict that human beings who call themselves the image of their GOD have ever engaged in; others of our people, on the Pacific Coast, are 6,000 miles distant; and still others, in the Philippines, are on the other side of the globe. When it is considered that originally the quarrel was in no sense theirs, how is their absolute fidelity to the cause for which France and England and Italy are fighting to be explained? The answer is that their devotion to the common purpose is largely spiritual—the soul is in the war as well as the heart. At an anniversary meeting in Massachusetts a few days ago General NELSON A. MILES said something that illustrates this and is worth quoting:

> We cannot believe that truth, honor, justice, and reason have been dethroned and that in future force must be the ruling element. We cannot believe that savage brutality must control and govern, especially at a time when the moral and spiritual intelligence of the world has reached its highest advance toward universal enlightenment, in science, invention, art, and knowledge, and, in fact, everything that is beneficial to the human race.

All the intelligence, all the virtue, all the honor of America cry out against the monstrous perversion of morality which Germany calls Kultur and would force upon mankind. They cannot believe that GOD is the Kaiser's god, and that the beast will prevail over what is good and sacred in man. Religion as well as patriotism is enlisted in this war. Such is the American view, felt by all, though it may be unexpressed. So the people are one in a determination to give their all, if necessary, to free the world from a malignant and sinister influence that would destroy everything that is worth living for.

The second year, like the first, is to be given to raising, equipping, and training armies, but in this second year America will make her giant's strength felt. Her million and a half of soldiers will become three millions; hundreds of ships will leave her ways; in the air she will have thousands of planes; instead of 100,000 men on the battleline she will be represented by such an army as the British Empire justly boasts; her navy will know a vaster expansion; and preparation will be translated into achievement. Before the second year closes, America's intervention may bring the war to an end gloriously and decisively. The cause is righteous, and it cannot fail.

FIELD MARSHAL VON MICAWBER.

"We must suffer still for a short "time our present anxieties in order "to insure our good future." So Field Marshal von HINDENBURG, cheering up the Essen Chamber of Commerce and the old folks at home. A little more than four months ago the Field Marshal was telling the Vienna Neue Freie Presse:

> If for some time yet we maintain our strength and exercise patience, we shall carry it to a good end.

By mid-January the German Mars, adored in his monstrous wooden idol by the Berlinese, was giving out amusingly strong tonic to a collection of German editors:

> By next April I shall be in Paris.

Now "we must suffer still for a short time our present anxieties." Always a "good future," "victory," "a strong peace," is going to turn up. Steel and wood Mars playing Micawber, trying to micawberize the "German people." Great is HINDENBURG. One wonders if honest "German Michel" doesn't get a little weary of being cheered up even by the wooden god of the German tribes.

WAR AND PEACE LOANS.

The eighth German "war loan" closes on Tuesday. Our third peace or Liberty Loan closes May 4, according to the announcement, but might close even before the German loan if the limit were reached. When Germany announced its loan and great Spring offensive the two things became associated in the minds of others than the Germans. Today it is announced that the Germans are checked before Amiens, and it may be added that they are checked still further by the buoyant opening of our loan. When important districts "beat the pistol" by announcing that their quota is oversubscribed before the lists are opened little remains except to add the figures and learn how much we have beaten the record.

It would insure and intensify that announcement to bear in mind that there are records to beat besides our own. We must measure up to our allies, and they will take a lot of beating. We must also measure up to our records in earlier wars or expose ourselves to conviction of having been more interested in them than in the war which dwarfs other wars as much as a principle exceeds an isolated fact in permanent importance.

When the issue was whether the Union or slavery should survive, our thirty million of people spent eight billions for the North and an unknown sum for the South. Now we have nearly fourfold the population which survived that four years' struggle and over tenfold the wealth. In the chronicles of that time it was said that the take the entire twelve billion of bonds authorized three times over, and the amount now specifically asked for in addition. As the matter stands, we are lending to our allies almost as much as we are spending on our account, and they are bleeding both in men and money. Our tax burdens now are not half in proportion to what they were when we paid off the war debt in a manner which amazed the world.

Our work is equally cut out for us if we measure our effort by numbers as well as by wealth. It is said that New York's share may be half the loan. The entire loan would not be all of New York's share if we are to do as well as our allies. New York took of the second loan $1,413,045,800, or approximately half of the three billion minimum now. But that was easy, because New York was the first to wake up. Now the country is awake, and wants the bonds which it let us have before. The country may take the three billions without New York's help. To the first loan New York's proportion of subscribers was 35 per cent. To the second loan our proportion was 25 per cent. Now the talk is that the subscribers outside New York may exceed the total for the country on the second loan. One sanguine prophet expects forty million subscribers, or about the number it ought to be if our population is compared with that of our allies. The measure of our duty by wealth is equally difficult to meet. Our allies, whose soldiers have held the frontier of freedom for years, and whose navy alone protects our coasts from bombardment, have run in debt to tenfold our proportion.

These comparisons are stimulating, not discouraging. But we must earn our thanks from those to whose succor we have pledged our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor. It would not be safe to suggest in any public place that we are going to be deadheads, or even passengers, in the enterprise of salvaging democracy and uncrowning the last of the unchosen Kings. In that enterprise we are going to beat all the arithmetics ever printed. We are going to wipe out the reproach that there is blood money in our pockets and that it took us years of deliberation to detect that this war is a holy war and that we were neutral on a moral issue.

COUNT CZERNIN'S PREDICAMENT.

If Germany was advised of the conversations entered into between a representative of Count CZERNIN and a representative of the French Government, held in Switzerland "before the western offensive began," then the purpose of this Austrian overture for peace and of Count CZERNIN'S disclosure of the fact is plain. It was represented to France that the only obstacle to peace was her desire to recover Alsace-Lorraine; the reply from France was that on the basis of an abandonment of that war aim no discussion of peace was possible. Germany and Count CZERNIN knew that the condition would be rejected. Their purpose, and the Count's purpose in alluding to the matter in his speech the other day, was to make it appear to the Allies that the Alsace-Lorraine restitution was the only obstacle to peace, thereby hoping to separate France from her allies. As an attempt to create division among the enemies of Germany it was an utter failure. There is perfect understanding among the Allies, and there are many obstacles to peace besides Alsace-Lorraine—notably, the first of all, that the German military power is not yet crushed.

If the German Government was not advised of Count CZERNIN'S overture to France, his reference to the matter will appear to multitudes of Germans as a confession that Austria attempted peace negotiations without informing Germany, which they would construe as an act of treachery to her ally. If he began to talk about peace without advising Berlin, Germany would demand his head, and probably get it. The statesmen of the countries in alliance with Germany are expected to follow, not to lead. The only safe rule for them to follow is to understand that they are vassals, not equals.

Either way he is dishonored. Premier CLEMENCEAU'S comment upon Count CZERNIN'S statement was brief: "CZERNIN lied." This is severe, but just and true. Count CZERNIN said: "Premier CLEMENCEAU addressed to "me an inquiry whether and upon what "basis I was prepared to negotiate." Premier CLEMENCEAU did nothing of the kind, and the French Government has published documents to prove it. The original overture came not from France but from Austria. The arrangement had been entered into under a former Ministry and CLEMENCEAU, in the hope "that the conversations might furnish useful sources of "information," allowed Count ARMAND "to continue his journey in Switzerland upon the request of Count "REVERTATA." CLEMENCEAU'S instructions to ARMAND were "Listen and say nothing." It would appear that after the conversations had failed of their purpose, as they were bound to fail, ARMAND, for his own protection and for that of his Government, secured from Count REVERTATA, CZERNIN'S representative, a statement written and signed by his own hand to the effect that the Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs had been advised of the conversations with ARMAND, and that they were not unofficial, but had been authorized by Count CZERNIN. Such a statement would be a complete justification of Austria's course, and would be used to the full by Count CZERNIN. Hence the reference to it in his speech.

A GOOD GROUND SYMBOLIST.

Mr. CHARLES F. MURPHY is one of our most placid and placable Manhattan statesmen. He is used to "vilification" and is grown stout and prosperous in years of it. His refusal to sit at meat with Senator OWEN of Oklahoma at a Democratic dinner, where, it seems, that assailant of Tammany wasn't to be present, after all, must have had other reason than that which Mr. MURPHY, in a fine, unusual, indignant, moving-picture moment, chose to give. Though all the vials of outlander as of home-bred virtuous wrath were poured upon Mr. MURPHY and the Saints of East Fourteenth Street, he would remain unvexed. You can almost see him wink as he protests against the Owenese "vilification."

No. Mr. MURPHY, no matter what excursion into socialism, limited, he was driven or duped in the municipal campaign last year, is a conservative. So Tammany had always been. Who has more veneration for his own private property than a Tammany leader? Even if "mine" and "thine" are mixed up inextricably in its political practice, Tammany is acquisitive, individualistic, attached to the old ways. No red-eyed Oklahoma omnium-gatherum Constitution, no bustling radical Oklahoman or Californian ideas for Tammany.

Mr. MURPHY'S empty chair at that dinner was symbolic. If Mr. MURPHY fell among committees and leagues last year that foisted upon Tammany a candidate and a program unbeloved of it, if the grand old organization was "euchred," so to speak, by "rank outsiders," this year Tammany is itself again, the only original Democratic concern. Aspiring outsiders, thrusting themselves into State Democratic politics, must be as taboo as OWEN of Oklahoma.

If Mr. MURPHY be indeed a Symbolist, Mr. OWEN, who accepts the snub with entire good nature and consents to absent himself from the Jefferson Day dinner of the Democratic Club lest Mr. MURPHY be grieved, has only to repeat, as Mr. ROOSEVELT, when Governor, did in a somewhat similar instance:

> Along came the spider
> And sat down beside her
> And frightened Miss Muffitt away.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

Organized by twenty merchants on April 5, 1768, in the historic Fraunces's Tavern, the Chamber of Commerce has commemorated its completion of a century and a half of high usefulness in the mercantile and public life of the city and the nation. What contrasts are presented in its honored career of 150 years! At its birth New York was a Colonial province, the city population was 25,000, its transportation was restricted to sailing vessels, farmers' wagons, and lumbering stages, which took as many days to reach Philadelphia as it now requires hours, and flour was the chief staple of export. The monetary system was chaotic, and one of the earliest acts of the Chamber was to establish fixed values for the paper bills of other colonies and the miscellaneous Spanish, French, and English coins in circulation. Whatever their economic theories, those old merchants of New York had very positive views on the necessity of a sound currency for home and foreign commercial dealings, and to the lasting credit of their successors the members of the Chamber of Commerce have never been found lacking in their sound-money views. The portrait of ALEXANDER HAMILTON, in its splendid gallery, was painted at the request of the Chamber in recognition of his national financial policy when Secretary of the Treasury, and the portrait of JOHN SHERMAN stands as a tribute to his labors in the United States Senate in bringing about the resumption of specie payment after the civil war.

The Chamber has been fortunate in the character of its presidents, who have been men of the highest standing in the community, and in the loyalty and devotion of its members. Many of the most illustrious names in the history of New York are found in the list of presidents, from JOHN CRUGER, Mayor of Colonial New York for ten years, whose family name has been associated with New York life for two centuries, was the first President. From his time to that of EUGENIUS H. OUTERBRIDGE, who had the honor of presiding over the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary, there have been thirty-three Presidents. Their names indicate that the old merchants of New York had something else in their make-up than the mere acquirement of material prosperity. They were, in many respects, leaders in philanthropy and civic improvements. Among the Presidents were ISAAC LOW, JOHN BROOME, JOHN MURRAY, ROBERT LENOX, JAMES GORE KING, MOSES H. GRINNELL, ABIEL A. LOW, WILLIAM E. DODGE, CHARLES STEWART SMITH, ALEXANDER E. ORR, MORRIS K. JESUP, A. BARTON HEPBURN, and the late SETH LOW. Five of our city streets bear the names of former Presidents, Desbrosses, Murray, White, Broome, and Bayard.

As early as 1786 the Chamber suggested the building of the Erie Canal, and the statue of DE WITT CLINTON which ornaments its building is a fitting recognition of his unflagging efforts to complete that important route of inland navigation. It made New York the metropolitan trading centre of the New World, and its opening, in 1825, was followed by a great expansion in both foreign and domestic commerce. In the civil war, under the presidencies of PELATIAH PERIT and A. A. LOW, the Chamber collectively and individually gave liberal aid to the Government in the support of the Union. It took an active and helpful part in the Tweed ring investigations. In our present struggle for righteousness and human justice the Chamber has expressed its attitude in sympathy and support of our allies in no uncertain manner. The history of its 150 years, which has just been written to commemorate its honored age, is more than a history of the mercantile growth of New York from the Colonial period. It is the story of a multitude of factors of value and worth in the development of the metropolis and very much in the nation, revealing the wide interests in which the Chamber of Commerce has had a part.

THE CITY AS GROCER.

A Protest and a Denial of Charges of Profiteering.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Since the appointing of Federal food boards, we have heard much of profiteering. The statement in the daily press that Commissioner Day is preparing to start a chain of stores to sell butter, eggs, potatoes at cost is nothing but the city "profiteering" at the expense of the retail grocers of this city.

So far, all the investigating, as well as the charge made in certain quarters that the retail grocers were charging exhorbitant profits have never yet been proved, in fact the reverse. In all this socialistic cry for the city to go into the buying and selling of food at cost, it seems strange that the authorities cannot see that the retail grocers could sell cheaper if they had no rent, rates, and overhead expenses to pay. For the city to go into the business of selling food is most unfair to the retail grocers of this city, and it is but poor acknowledgement of the loyalty and support the retailers have given the Food Administration. The retail grocers are being called on to make sacrifices in the way of reducing their already too meagre profits, subscribe to Liberty Loans, Red Cross Funds, and any number of their sons have gone across, while they themselves have come across in many ways; but to have to meet competition so one-sided as that of the latest move of the city authorities is such as to call for strong opposition on the part of the grocers.

I don't suppose that much good will come from any protest of the grocers, ure as to be susceptible of being "indorsed by Austria and presented to the German Government." It was Austria that had desired to obtain these peace proposals from France; France was seeking no proposals. That is admitted in the statement of CZERNIN'S representative.

So the Count did not tell the truth when he said that CLEMENCEAU had addressed to him an inquiry about the basis of negotiations. So far as the Allies are concerned, this is the only point of importance in this short chapter of war history. It was the hope of Count CZERNIN, of course, that if he could make the Allies believe that a peace could be concluded if France would give up her demands for Alsace-Lorraine, they would bring pressure to bear upon France to that effect, and desert her if she refused to yield. It was a characteristic Teutonic imagining, full of guile and malice, yet not at all dangerous because of the perfect unity of the Allies in their firm resolve to make an end of the German menace. The other aspect of the matter may be left to adjustment between Austria and Germany. If Germany was a party to the transaction from the beginning, as is most probable, she has simply to record the failure of another of her attempts to divide the Allies. If she had no knowledge of it, the comments of the German press are likely to be very unpleasant reading for the Austrian Minister of Foreign Affairs.

REFORMED WOMAN'S PARTY.

Why It Changed Its Mind on an Important Question.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So many people seem to be interested in the changed policy of the New York City Woman Suffrage Party and to misunderstand the motives that led to it that it seems wise to explain the matter more fully than has yet been done. The officers of the City Suffrage Party have repeatedly declared that the nonpartisan policy maintained by this organization was a temporary measure adopted to give its women members time to study and think before they affiliated with any of the political parties. The great campaign of education for citizenship which we have conducted throughout the city has been facilitated by the nonpartisan attitude of our officers and leaders, since we have reached all classes of women and the women of all parties, who believed that we were impartial in presenting the principles of all the parties.

Our organization as an organization is still nonpartisan, a fact our critics seem to overlook. In it the women of all parties may meet and discuss all public questions from their various standpoints; through it they may unite to take action on all kinds of nonpartisan and humanitarian measures.

The policy of the party was changed for two reasons: First, because of the fact that women will enroll in the political parties on May 18, after which they will naturally take a greater interest in politics; and, second, because there is a demand from the political parties, all of them—for our trained women to serve as political leaders and captains. We believe that women used to organization work should take these positions, yet we found our own women so loyal to the Woman Suffrage Party and so bound to it by affection that it was an ordeal for them to resign office in it to give their services elsewhere. We have, therefore, felt it our duty to give them perfect freedom to serve both the city party and the political party of their choice. We believe that women and men should work together in the parties for the good of the community, not that women should form a political party for themselves. Personally I do not believe in any kind of a woman's party. In view of all these facts we feel that we have done the right thing, the patriotic thing, and we changed our policy not because of pressure from outside groups of people, but because of conditions that developed within our own ranks.

Would Follow Gorgas.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

"A Line Officer" writes in your issue of March 31 that he considers higher rank for the medical men in the United States Army unnecessary, and that it would be better if they were not a part of the United States Army at all. He suggests it be made an outside organization, like the Red Cross. What he has decided about the Ordnance, Quartermaster and Engineer Corps we have yet to learn. There's the fear, too, that he may take a scunner against the staff.

Possibly this "Line Officer" has not read his statistics carefully in the casualties today, which are heaviest among officers not of the line, but of the Medical Corps. The only two Victoria crosses with two bars have been won by medical officers, and this same unsoldierly corps has the distinction in our own United States of having the first Medal of Honor for gallantry in action awarded by the Congress to a surgeon of the Medical Corps; and to Leonard Wood as an assistant surgeon while commanding a detachment of Infantry.

As nearly every medical and surgical man of eminence has offered himself for the service, the Medical Corps will be more efficient than ever before, and since Gorgas has the rank to make himself heard, let us follow his counsels.

SISTER OF TWO LINE OFFICERS IN FRANCE.
Little Rock, Ark., April 3, 1918.

The Women to Serve Abroad.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The ruling that no army wives shall be accepted for service abroad is probably the result of an effort to forestall an imaginary rush to France by hordes of loving women. It is, of course, a reflection not only on the women, but on their husbands, to believe that they have no common sense or patriotism, and that they would permit a spasm of family affection to hinder the carrying on of the war. The published articles which say that the presence of a wife in the same country depresses and worries a husband, while only "vivacious" unmarried women near the front contribute to sustain the morale of troops, are too inane to discuss. Almost all the women in the country today who can go abroad will be disqualified under this rule, and they are the ones who have most at stake, who would give themselves most wholeheartedly to the work to be done.

This is not a plea to be allowed to live in France in idleness. No sane person would choose the war zone for a residence now. To cross one must pass certain requirements and sign a contract for six months, which adequately protects the Government from inefficiency. It is only justice and wisdom to give every one the chance to compete for the privilege of service. Let those go who can serve best. Personal relationships should have no place in a crisis like this.

The No-Casualties Order.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Another incomprehensible order has just been issued by our Government, that forbidding any publication of the casualties among our soldiers in France. General March's explanation for omitting the addresses of our men killed, wounded, or missing gave a degree of reasonableness to that order, but this latest dictum seems to be the height of folly. Are we who have given sons, brothers, our dearest and dearest, to be denied the right of a full and free knowledge of what is happening to them? The Government has undertaken to notify by telegraph the family or nearest friend of every soldier or sailor killed, wounded, or captured, but this will prove a well-nigh impossible task when our boys get into such heavy fighting as has taken place lately and thousands are up their precious lives in order that we at home may be saved.

IN PLAINS OF PICARDY.

In far-off plains of Picardy
Our Country's Flag is flying,
And Life and Death are battling there;
But no men there fears dying
So large a hope has set men free
From fear, in far-off Picardy!

To us, across the ocean deep,
A wondrous strain comes winging;
It is the song of lads who march
On to the conflict, singing—
Our lads, who so have longed to be
Where heroes strive, in Picardy!

Their strength is tried, their hearts so brave
Were fed on Freedom's glory;
"The coming of the Lord," they sing—
"Mine eyes have seen the glory!"
The glory all at last shall see,
Rise o'er the plains of Picardy.

O Union Jack! O Tricolor!
No more you grieve us, calling

THE GERMAN BOOK THE ENEMY.

A Preface to Beethoven an Example of German Propaganda at Its Worst.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A writer in a Swiss paper, Maurice Kufferath, has some interesting things to say apropos of a well known piece of music, Beethoven's Sonata, which recently appeared in the collection called the "Universal Edition" of Leipsic. Paper, type, engraving, all is first class; the price is uncommonly low. There is a reason for that, as will be seen. A preface and commentary accompany the music; one of those copious commentaries "made in Germany," seventy pages of close text for twenty-four pages of music. Everything that has ever been written on the famous sonata has been reproduced in said commentary. As a piece of "documentation" it is most precious; but the author's considerations! They are simply "killing."

You open the book and the "Vorwort," or preface, is devoted not to Beethoven but to the "Great War" and you read this lucubration:

> This study of the sonata Op. 111 was written during the first year of the world war. In the supreme distress of this war, so criminally imposed upon the German people, Beethoven, with a few other great names, appeared to us as a truly tutelary and consoling spirit; as the most precious talisman of a nation whom the adverse powers, themselves so belated, have dared to insult by calling it barbarian.
> In this world war Beethoven has taken part in many a battle; he has won victories. Harder battles are preparing for the German people and those also Beethoven will help us to win.

After all, since God himself is the ally of Germany, why should not Beethoven be the auxiliary of Hindenburg, Mackensen, and Gallwitz?

"The German nation," we read further, "is the most capable in the world, more richly endowed with talents and faculties than even the Greeks and the Romans." The original text is worth quoting: "Die Deutsche Nation, die fähigste der Erde—the most capable on earth—mit Talenten und Fähigkeiten reicher als die Griechische und Römische ausgestattet."

He who signs this extravaganza is one Heinrich Schenker, probably some pedant illustrious in the land of "Kultur." It matters not; but what does matter is that this edition of his is subsidized and recommended by the Imperial and Royal Department of Public Instruction of Austria-Hungary. This means that both professors and pupils will study it, that it will find its way in conservatories of music, schools, and private homes not only in Germany and the rest of Europe, but in America and the rest of the world; for the "Universal Edition" has a very large circulation, and young people, too immature to do their own thinking, will accept as truth the wild statements of a German pedagogue simply because "magister dixit."

Twenty pages of the commentary are taken up with a scornful treatment of all commentators who, previous to Herr Schenker, had presumed to speak of the beauty of Beethoven's sonata. All they have written on the subject is nothing but worthless screed, "verkleckste Tintigkeit." The idea of "a certain Frenchmen, named Debussy, to whom, unfortunately, even in Germany, some grossly ignornant scribes of the press have given the title of the prince of musical progress," daring to speak of the simplicity and beauty of Beethoven's conclusion! No doubt the word "Frenchman" stirred up the bile of the Herr Professor, for he spits out his venom in these words: "A people devoid of all sincerity, of all intelligence, of all culture of life, on the whole the dullest of artists of life—der bornierteste Lebenskünstler."

Of course, the English, the Italians, the Russians, and the Americans all get it in turn. The love of sport has completely destroyed in the English all religious sense, all morals, all artistic taste, all scientific spirit; a people coarse, inhuman, lying, disgusting (!) It is true that there is Shakespeare, and Carlyle, and Byron, and a few others, but that means nothing; for just as any malefactor may have a fine thought now and then, or occasionally give birth to a sound and vigorous child, so it happened that England occasionally produced a great mind. But "nevertheless England remains the great criminal among nations."

The Italian is "a bandit and a braggart," perfidious, whose motto is the "sacro egoismo" of brigands, without their chivalrous character.

The Russian is a "beast" who takes for kindness of heart (Herzensguete) a weeping sentimentality caused by the abuse of alcohol. Moreover, the Russian nation is afflicted with a voracious annexationist appetite.

Now we come to the Americans upon whom this mad Teuton pours out the vials of his malignant spits: The Americans are "a rabble of shopkeepers, without culture, (ungesiblidetes Krackmerpack,) whose dull brains are exercised only over the coarsest buffoonery; their country, so wrongly called the land of 'unlimited possibilities,' is, on the contrary, the land of the 'most restricted possibilities,' the country where the very lowest commercialism is the exclusive rule and therefore where the most profound lack of culture (tiefste Unbildung) is to be found; a lack of culture which results in impersonality, irreligion, laziness, and that want of logic of which Wilson, Eliot, and others have given so many proofs; a country where God is sacrilegiously invoked in favor of the most vulgar commercial enterprises; where ostentatious buildings are erected to vain ideas, but where, in reality, one hears but empty words pilfered from some of the heroes of humanity; in short, a country where ideas of 'culture' and 'humanity' are as far from their true meaning as whisky is far from the nectar of the Olympian gods(?)"

This eructation, let it be noticed, was penned before the United States had declared war against Germany, and it was inspired in the learned pedagogue by the torpedoing of the Lusitania, which he calls "a legitimate slap upon the cheek of the Yankee."

Now for the conclusion:

> German genius must lay bare in their incapacity and baseness the nations, whatever may be the labels they assume, whatever the orgies of lying, hypocrisy, slander, and cruelty in which they may again indulge; German genius must chastise their self-conceit and finally cleanse them to make them worthy of culture.

All this wild ranting apropos of Beethoven's sonata. "The man is crazy," the reader will say, or, with a contemptuous shrug of the shoulders, he will ejaculate "What a ——r fool!" and dismiss the whole thing from his mind. Now that is precisely what he must not do. Far too long have we played the game of the ostrich that hides its head in the sand. Years before the appearance of this choice production from the pen of Herr Schenker we have seen alarming symptoms of the mental disease with which the whole German nation is gangrened, but we paid no heed to them. Is a catastrophe necessary to open the eyes of the American public? The writer wants to impress upon his readers the danger that lurks, like a snake in the grass, in the German book. This is but one more instance of the prostitution of art in the service of rapine and murder; of the prostitution of letters and sciences in this same service we have had innumerable examples; and once more it demonstrates that from top to bottom of the social scale the whole German people are contaminated with the mad lust for power. This is most alarming for the rest of the world, for we know that the epidemic has already made too many victims among the "intellectuals" of other countries. The German book is the most active agent in spreading the disease. For over fifty years it has been the vehicle of German sophistry. The German book is responsible for the lowering of the moral level of humanity. Any book whatsoever, from the innocent-looking school book to the pretentious treatise on philosophy, from the children's picture book to the music score—anything, in short, that comes to us from a German printing press—is open to suspicion. The German microbe is hiding somewhere between its covers. Who would have dreamed of discovering it in a piece of music?

The plague is with us here in America, in our circulating libraries, schools, and colleges, and it behooves us to use strong prophylactic means to guard against its ravages. Committees composed not only of competent men, but of loyal Americans, should carefully examine all German books before allowing them to be placed in the hands of children and young people. The German book, voilà l'ennemi!

ART NOTES.

A Loan Exhibition of Eighteenth Century French Prints.

A private view was held yesterday of an exceptionally fine loan collection of eighteenth century French prints at the Gallery of the French Institute in the United States, following the luncheon given by the institute to M. André Tardieu to commemorate the first anniversary of the entry of the United States into the war.

The prints include rare plates and very rare states in the finest possible impressions, as fresh as flowers with the dew on them. A particularly lovely group is that of the Fragonards, owned by Mr. Morgan and derived from the collection of the artist's sister-in-law and pupil, Mlle. Gérard. That gentle idyl of rural domesticity, "La bonne Mère," is seen in three states. "L'Amour" and "La Folie" are in proof and first state, respectively, with such enchanting veils of color as fill the harming prints with light suppressed atmosphere. The same pair in other states is lent by Mrs. Bertron and affords an invaluable opportunity to students of prints to discriminate points of resemblance and difference.

Other rare items are the "Almanac Nationals," by Janinet, lent by a member of the institute; a couple of Roman subjects by the same master from Hubert Robert's stately originals, lent by Miss Gould, and three magnificent prints lent by Mrs. Joseph Duveen, "La Rose" and "La Main," by Debucourt, the greatest of the colorists, surpassing himself in these films of rose and blue cast over the dainty framework of the design, and "L'Oiseau ranimée," also by Debucourt, of a not less delicate grace in treatment.

The fine prints are far too numerous to be given their due in a brief notice, but a visit to the exhibition, which is free to the public until April 20, will emphasize the prevailing impression of the perfection of French craftsmanship and of the sensitiveness to beauty of the great French race.

The collection has been assembled by Miss Margaret B. Gould, curator of prints are lent by Mrs. Samuel Bertron, Mrs. George Blumenthal, Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. John Woodruff Simpson, Mr. Thomas Thorne, Mrs. Joseph Duveen, Miss Gould, Mrs. Henry Moffat, Mrs. Lewis Rutherford Morris, and other private owners. A number also are drawn from the collections of the Museum of French Art.

Period Art in Furnishings.

An interesting collection of period furniture and textiles, Tudor, Elizabethan, Chippendale, Adam, &c., is on view at the Clarke Art Rooms, having been consigned for sale by auction in settlement of a partnership account by Charles of London. The particular attraction of such a collection is the color, the depth and bloom of which cannot be imitated or rivaled in modern work. In the fine old tapestry panels with their muffled blues and greens, yellows and browns; in the gay floral needlework subdued by time to the tenderest harmonies, in the black shadows of oak cupboards and tables, the dark crimson of mahogany, the tarnished gilt of mirror frames, and the stained ivory of Adam mantels, there is rest for the eyes. The present collection contains many fine pieces characteristic in form and rich in this special grace of color, by no means of the "everyday" character that is apt to dominate the auction rooms on the occasion of furniture exhibitions.

Free Drawing Instruction.

The Lenox Art Academy, 146 East 115th Street, announces the entire reopening of all departments, morning and evening sessions, with special classes for children. Summer session will open April 22. Applicants will be accepted daily from 1 to 8 P. M. Free instruction is offered in fashion drawing, illustrating, cartooning, drawing, and painting from life and still life, interior decorating, scenery painting, and architectural drawing.

Exhibition of Strang Etchings Extended.

The exhibition of etchings by William Strang, in the print gallery of the New York Public Library, which was to close on March 31, has been extended to the

5,000,000 GARMENTS FOR MEN IN SERVICE

All These Have Been Made by Workers for the American Red Cross.

SEEK EMERGENCY NURSES

German Drive Adds to Burden of New York Committee of Fatherless Children in France.

The American Red Cross in its April bulletin prints a report which shows that up to Feb. 1, this year, the Red Cross has supplied 3,431,067 sweaters, mufflers, wristlets, helmets and socks to the soldiers and sailors of the United States. Of this total 1,139,469 articles were delivered to the fighting services in January of this year. While official figures are not yet available it is considered certain that the total, with February and March added, will be in excess of 5,000,000 garments, all of them made by members and workers of the American Red Cross.

The same bulletin includes a report of the distribution of 5,000,000 francs among the French departments for the relief of those soldier families which have suffered most as a result of the war. Among those who have officially thanked the Red Cross for aiding these families are General Petain, the Governors of the various departments, and scores of French Government officials in Paris.

With the object of providing nurses for the town and country nursing service of the Red Cross the War Council of the American Red Cross has appropriated $25,000 as a fund to be administered by the Henry Street Settlement of New York, for the education of student nurses. Assistance in supporting the work of the settlement in the training of nurses for public health service was requested of the Red Cross by Miss Lillian D. Wald, head resident of the settlement.

In return for the assistance that has been provided it is agreed that among the pupils trained a certain number shall enter the Town and Country Nursing Service of the Red Cross each year.

Nurses for Emergency Needed.

The American Red Cross is planning to organize the nurses who, for one reason or another, are ineligible for active military duty, into a corps which can respond to emergency demands in this country. They will be known as Home Defense Nurses. Miss Jane A. Delano, director of the Red Cross Department of Nursing in Washington, is undertaking this special enrollment work now. The Home Defense Nurses, she explains, will be called on for non-military duty, and she is inviting all graduate nurses to join her in building up this organization. It is Miss Delano's idea that her plan will provide a "second line of defense" so far as safeguarding the public health is concerned.

"We need all the assistance we can get in order to meet the emergencies that are likely to arise," Miss Delano declares. "It is our duty to safeguard the public health by preparing this second line of defense. We all realize that in every community there are women ineligible for military duty who still want to help. I feel confident that there are thousands of graduate nurses throughout the country who will respond willingly to their country's call for help. We need them for all cases of emergency, including local disasters. We can use them in all forms of visiting and instructive nursing, institutional work, and as instructors in elementary hygiene and the home care of the sick.

"To organize them for these purposes a special enrollment for such nurses has been authorized by the American Red Cross to be known as the Home Defense Nurses. An applicant must have a diploma from an accredited school of nursing in the State from which she was graduated, and be a member of the American Red Cross and able to render some regular service.

Must Be Red Cross Members.

"If not a member of the Red Cross she must join the nearest chapter or branch and then present evidence of her membership along with her application to the Home Defense Nurses. On being properly enrolled she will receive a membership badge with a bar bearing the title, "Home Defense Nurse." The Home Defense Nurse will wear a uniform, that of the regular graduate nurse for indoor or outdoor service, or a special apron to be designed later. At the Division Bureau of Nursing, where she makes her application, records and files will afford information and channels through which such nurses will be assigned to service.

"I do want to impress upon the public the necessity of holding up the hands of our Red Cross nurses by supplying them with work up to the time they are called. Some among those called for military duty have been discriminated against by persons who have refused to take a Red Cross nurse on a private case for fear they might be inconvenienced by making a change while the case was in progress. So long as the nurses are willing to give themselves for the cause, we can do no more than assist them in every possible way."

The New York County Chapter of the Red Cross, 389 Fifth Avenue, has acknowledged these new donations of $100 or more to its war funds:

Parera Children's Fair $485	St. Nicholas Society, N. Y.....$300
Mischa Elman Concert 2,125	Julius Goldman... 250

The model workroom of the Red Cross, in its new quarters at 20 East Thirty-eighth Street, is making a fine record, particularly so far as surgical dressings are concerned. The workroom turned out 468,000 surgical dressings last month. During the previous month its record was 132,706 dressings. In its new quarters it has been able to increase its output by over 300,000.

Armenian and Syrian Relief.

New contributions acknowledged by Cleveland H. Dodge, Treasurer of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, the office of which committee is at 1 Madison Avenue, amount to more than $310,000. The fund is now approaching in money collected, since organization, the $10,000,000 total.

In acknowledgment of an appropriation of $250,000 for relief work in Persia, the representatives of the committee at Teheran, Persia, have cabled as follows to the committee in New York:

Thanks for generous remittances. Appalling distress continues. Hundreds are dying. We are feeding about 20,000 in Teheran, and work has extended to Meshed, Ramadan, Kasvin, Kermanshah, and Sultanabad. Will probably need additional funds later. Will advise when needed.

The committee has also received word that a remittance of $11,200 for relief in Palestine has been received by the representative of the committee at Jerusalem. For the support of Armenian student refugees in Switzerland $10,000 has been cabled to Geneva.

The New York Committee of the Fatherless Children of France, of which Miss Luisita Leland, 563 Park Avenue, is Chairman, and Alexander J. Hemphill, 140 Broadway, the Treasurer, has collected to date over $367,313. The number of orphans keeps ever increasing, with each new offensive, and the call for aid and sympathy from mothers and children grows ever more pathetic. Quite apart from the money sent, the knowledge that there is some one in America caring for their welfare and interested in them personally, acts like a tonic and gives courage to many a tired widow, at her wits' end to feed her little ones. It costs only $36.50 a year to support one child, and its name and address is given to its benefactor. Donations of over $100, received last week, follow:

Food-for-France Fund.

The Food-for-France Fund, 10 East Fifty-eighth Street, of which Miss Carith Spences is the Chairman and Alexander J. Hemphill the Treasurer, has issued the following statement, which explains how the committee provides nourishing foods for the military hospitals in France and also for the destitute civilian population:

Shipments made by the fund are sent by the French Mail steamers, through the courtesy of the French Government. When they reach Bordeaux a special deputy of the Service de Sante comes down to pick out cases bearing the fund's mark and to hurry them on up to Paris, where, at the Entrepot des Dons (Bureau of Gifts) they are stored in our own barracks, stock taken, and properly entered on the records.

The Entrepot des Dons is a group of barracks which is put by the Service de Sante of the French Government to be at the disposal of the committees independent of the Red Cross which are sending supplies solely for the French. In our barracks, which is under lock and key, there are various kinds of supplies, neatly arranged in rows—sugar, milk, macaroni, chocolate, &c., and in one corner is a desk, where Mrs. Herbert R. Eldridge, who accompanied Miss Spencer to Paris, remains to handle the incoming and outgoing of our wares.

The requests come in and are filled in the following way. Captain Besnier is in charge of the Entrepot des Dons, and whenever any one of the thousands of military hospitals in France needs something outside of its meagre military allowance, the statement comes into him on an official blank prepared for that purpose. When these requests are for food they are passed over to our committee, and we indicate in the margin just what we will give in response to each request. This is, of course, dependent on the amount of stock we have on hand. French soldiers then make up the shipment and send it off on the Government automobiles. A letter on our paper is mailed, together with an officially stamped list of articles shipped to the Medecin Chef, telling him it is a gift from the Food-for-France Fund. His letter of acknowledgement is kept on file in Paris. Copies of some of the most interesting ones will be sent to the committee in New York for circulation in this country.

Miss Spencer traveled pretty well all over the western front, just behind the lines, visiting the American troops at headquarters, the camps, and even went up to the front. She also went into three French army zones where, thanks to the courtesy of their respective Generals, she was able to see the French soldier, well and sick. This French soldier is a wonderful creature; the strain on him has been ceaseless since the beginning, yet he carries on with fineness of spirit that inspires us and makes us feel that nothing we can do for him is too much. He has so little compared to the English or American soldier. We have so much. A little of our plenty, that we will scarcely ever miss, will mean tremendous comfort to him at a time when he has suffered for us as much as for his own flag.

Red Cross February Report.

The American Red Cross, during the month of February, supplied 475,000 meals to the fighting men of France from eleven canteens on lines of communication. In the same period the Department of Military Affairs of the Red Cross from its fourteen rolling canteens at the front supplied 439,000 drinks to soldiers at the front.

Major James H. Perkins, American Red Cross Commissioner to Europe, in a report made to headquarters at Washington, says that 1,010 cases, each containing 122 cartons of tobacco and cigarettes, were distributed to United States soldiers. Pershing's men also received from the Red Cross Bureau of Donations to Hospitals 199,600 flannel pajamas, 146,000 muslin pajamas, 22,500 handkerchiefs, 13,000 socks and 5,100 shirts.

During February three rest stations on the line of communication and one emergency canteen were opened for service. At these places soldiers who are on leave are supplied with food by Red Cross women workers who have hot coffee and chocolate ready at all hours of the day or night. Each station is feeding about 600 men a day.

Other items of comfort distributed by the Military Supply Service of the Red Cross to soldiers during February include 5,580 pairs of socks, 3,316 sweaters, 1,560 ponchos, 6,000 pairs of gloves, 1,110 mufflers and 13,050 comfort bags. In addition 3,000 novels, 11,500 magazines, and 24,000 newspapers were distributed to camps and base hospitals. At one of the large aviation camps the Red Cross furnished a band with a complete set of musical instruments. At a point near the coast Major Perkins reports a hospital was opened for men of the navy. He has also arranged for the housing of convalescent officers and nurses on the Riviera.

That the soldiers will be kept abreast of the latest musical hits from home, fifty-seven phonographs and five pianos have been installed at new rest rooms at hospitals and camps.

Farms and truck gardens near seven base hospitals have been leased to be worked by convalescent soldiers and the vegetables will be given to the hospitals.

To 1,465 hospitals throughout France the American Red Cross through the Hospital Supply Service has sent 257,864 articles weighing 234,722 pounds. During February also the metropolitan canteens of the Red Cross supplied food and drink to 440,000 men.

Aid for Italian Refugees.

The American Committee in Aid of the Italian Refugees and Soldiers Crippled in War, which co-operates with the Lombardo Committee of Milan, acknowledges contributions to its fund amounting to $5,588. Countess Dolores Macchi di Cellere, wife of the Italian Ambassador at Washington, is the honorary and Mrs. Henry J. Burchell of this city the active Chairman of the American Committee. The Treasurer of the committee is Alessandro Oldrini, to whom subscriptions should be addressed care of the Guaranty Trust Company, 513 Fifth Avenue. The donations of $100 or more follow:

Mrs. V. Everit Macy $1,000	Mrs. J. H. Hammond $250
Mrs. W. G. Ladd.500	James Burchell.....250
Mrs. E. H. Hooker.500	Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Burchell 200
Mrs. F. Newton...494	Mrs. G. H. Church.100
Mr. and Mrs. A. Mitchell 300	Mrs. Andrew Carnegie 100
Miss Agnes Carpenter 300	Miss F. S. Sullivan.100

Among the members of the American Committee of this fund are Mrs. Theodore M. Taft, Mrs. Charles Stewart Smith, Mrs. Arthur H. Scribner, William Dean Howells, Thomas Hastings, Frank Hunter Potter, Mrs. John Hudson Bennett, Mrs. John Henry Hammond, Mrs. Howard Mansfield, Mrs. Elon H. Hooker, Mrs. Bertram Goodhue, and Mr. and Mrs. John Ames Mitchell.

The committee announces that owing to the recent heavy fighting on the Italian front there is an urgent need of money for new hospitals, trade schools, artificial limbs, and for material of all sorts. There are now 1,500,000 refugees from the invaded districts, mostly old men, women, and children, who are in need of food, shelter, and clothing.

A Fund for a Needy Family.

"He was a good man" is the tribute that employers and friends paid to Joe P. A few hours of blindness and a pain in his heart was all the warning that the man had before his sudden death. Mrs. P. is very delicate, and the shock of her husband's death made her condition even worse. Her pathetic helplessness in planning for the future, the well-trained children, and the comfortable home testified to the protection and care Joe P. had given his family. The burden of support and responsibility seemed to fall on the 14-year-old Rosie, and when the Charity Organization Society heard of the family the child was preparing to go to work and do her level best to take her father's place. The mother was also attempting to earn what she could at the very poorly paid work of making artificial flowers. Like her father, Rosie seemed to have every one's good will. She is earnest and eager to help her family or a neighbor in distress. To give the child a chance to finish her education and learn a trade, and to prevent delicate Mrs. P. from breaking down, the society appeals for a special fund of $280 to supply their necessities. Gifts should be sent to the office of the society at 105 East Twenty-second Street. Prompt acknowledgments will be mailed.

They Need $5 a Week.

Mrs. B., a widow in South Brooklyn, is suffering from acute heart trouble. Her husband was not a citizen so she is ineligible for a widow's pension. Since his death, two years ago, she has worked hard to support her four children, but now the doctor says she must stop if her life is not to be cut short. The eldest girl, aged 15, has just started to work, but her earnings are not sufficient to meet expenses. The Brooklyn Bureau of Charities wishes to keep this good home together and plans to supplement the family's income by $5 a week for food and other living expenses. Large or small contributions toward a fund of $250 for this purpose may be mailed to the bureau at 69 Schermerhorn Street, marked "For 9362 T."

Widowed Mothers' Fund.

A widow with three children is trying to manage without charitable aid. She works at white goods, and her eldest daughter, though afflicted with chronic St. Vitus's dance and in generally weak health, also works in a shop, unless she is too sick to go to the factory. Between them they earn barely enough for food and clothing, and are not able to pay their rent of $10 per month without depriving themselves of other necessaries. Friends who have noticed their hard struggle have asked the Widowed Mothers' Fund Association, 192 Bowery, to assist them with the rent. The appeal merits response, and any one wishing to contribute toward a fund for improving the condition of the family may address Mrs. Henry Zuckerman, 52 Broadway, or the rooms of the association.

TELLS OUR DUTY IN WAR.

Medical Officer Says All Should Restrict Use of Meat and Fats.

A New York medical officer, writing to a friend from a base hospital in France, says:

"As in the other places we have passed through here, and no doubt through the warring countries of Europe, one sees no men of military age except in uniform. These countries have but one occupation now—war!

"The Allies realize what they are up against, and they are looking to Uncle Sam for help—help with food, men, ships. Those who are staying comfortably at home are not helping unless they restrict to a reasonable minimum their consumption of meat, butter, and fats and dig down deep into their pockets to support all the philanthropic activities that the war has made necessary. Indeed, I think the time is not very far away when the people of the United States will be rationed, i. e., restricted to certain amounts of foods, in order that enough of these may be sent to the allied and neutral countries."

The Rational Means of Preventing Premature Breakdown

From maturity to old age, death is caused chiefly by the breaking-down or wearing out of the vital organs. Heart disease, apoplexy, paralysis, Bright's disease—these are the most deadly, the most feared, enemies of middle life and old age.

Unfortunately, the death rate from diseases of the heart, blood vessels, and kidneys has markedly increased in this country in the past thirty years. The annual loss among men and women in the very prime of life reaches the startling total of 130,000!

And the crime of it is—the terrible crime of it—that most of these deaths are premature. Fully 50 per cent. of them could be postponed for many years by early warning and guidance.

What is there about our American way of living that makes life so hazardous after forty-five?

In the earlier periods of life, tremendous gains in vitality have been made in the past quarter century. Trench after trench has been taken from such malignant enemies of childhood and youth as diphtheria, diarrhœal diseases, typhoid fever, tuberculosis, and even pneumonia—long a stubborn fighter.

The lines of these foes have been steadily pushed backward and ultimate control and victory is being drawn nearer and nearer every day.

If the death-rate in the earlier periods of life can be reduced to such an encouraging degree, it follows as surely as the night the day that the death rate over 45 can also be reduced—provided only that the same principles of disease prevention are put into effect.

The fact that so many men and women arrive at middle age without being aware of the degenerative changes which are going on within them is a serious factor in dealing with the problem.

There are literally thousands of men and women who go about with an exalted sense of well-being, well-groomed and apparently healthy, yet all the time some unsuspected disease is making headway inside. These people experience no pain, and although they tire easily, they attribute that fact to the passing of the exuberance of youth.

It may be long before the unsound tooth makes its condition felt. The decay must finally penetrate to the nerve. It is so with degenerative changes. When the pain does come it is more than a warning. It is a sign that serious damage has already been done.

The most important step in protecting against degenerative diseases is to have a thorough physical examination at least once a year, so that you will know exactly where you stand in regard to health or disease and so that you can regulate your life in accordance with your condition or take steps to remedy the trouble before it is too late.

Are Men Less Worthy Than Machines?

Go into any successful and well-ordered factory and note how carefully they watch over the machinery. Hardly a week or month goes by but that it is inspected or examined. Weakening is anticipated—sudden collapse is made impossible.

Before any single part has a chance to wear out and scrap the whole mechanism, it is repaired or relieved of strain. Nothing is left to chance or lack of understanding. The result is that ten years hence each machine will be fully 90 per cent. to 95 per cent. as efficient as it is to-day.

But what of the men who own the factory or the employes who operate it? Will they wear out before their time? In 1928, will they be physically and mentally ready for the scrap heap? Are they less worthy than machines—less worthy of care?

Take yourself, for example. Do you really understand the workings of the most marvelous machine in all the world—the human body?

Asked to-day the very simplest questions about personal hygiene and the relative values of food, could you answer them intelligently?

Even as infrequently as once a year (and this is the big thing) do you take your body to some Human Service Station and have it examined by experts?

Won't you some day have to pay for this neglect—in wasted years—in suffering—in reduced efficiency?

Fully fifty out of every hundred people in groups of supposedly healthy working people examined by the Life Extension Institute were actually in need of medical attention. From 5 to 10 per cent. were affected by serious advanced diseases of which they were not aware. Ninety per cent. of those impaired cases were not aware of impairment.

Almost Every Disease Can Be Prevented or Deferred

Disease does not develop over night. Like everything else it has its beginnings—little signs that you hardly notice at the time—a headache—a momentary pain around the heart—a certain indefinable soreness in the abdomen, irritability, etc.

Long before the heart breaks down or the kidneys lose their function or the arteries become seriously affected, there is a period of slow change which often affects the efficiency of the individual and reduces the body's resistance to disease. These early signs of trouble, while not apparent to the casual observer, are readily revealed by thorough health examinations.

The trouble nowadays is that many men and women are actually afraid to see a doctor. They have a slight pain somewhere—perhaps nothing more than a slight strain—some muscle overworked. Immediately, in their imagination, they conjure up all sorts of dread diseases. Before them looms the spectre of an operation. They call themselves physically brave, yet they shiver at the thought of serious sickness.

How many times are these people literally worrying themselves into ill-health when there is really nothing at all the matter!

Ex-President Taft is Chairman of the Board of Directors.

The Life Extension Institute was founded four years ago for one distinct purpose—to reduce the Nation's death rate and to raise the level of physical well-being by providing unbiased, periodic health examinations and spreading broadcast the simple, every-day principles of personal hygiene that every man and woman ought to know to avoid disease and suffering.

These are the broad general principles that have led men like ex-President Taft, Alexander Graham Bell, Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale; Ambassador Page, Robert W. deForrest, and one hundred other eminent authorities in this country and abroad, to give their services to the work without compensation of any kind.

The Life Extension Institute has nothing marvelous to offer except perhaps, the most marvelous thing in the world—rational, common-sense employment of tested scientific knowledge.

Over 60,000 men and women in all parts of the United States have taken the health services of the Institute and have received its physical examinations, its guidance and instructions.

The Life Extension Institute is irrevocably opposed to fads and quacks and charlatans. It cooperates with advanced scientific medicine and works in accordance with its highest modern ideals.

Membership Entitles You to the Following:

1. The Complete Standard Physical Examination.

3. Hemoglobin Blood Test for anemia.
4. Confidential detailed reports of your exact physical condition with a personal letter from one of our reviewing physicians commenting on your whole case, together with special health literature covering the impairments noted in the report.
5. Suggestions as to proper diet with appropriate diet lists.
6. Instructions covering appropriate exercises, with diagrams.
7. Keep-Well Bulletins covering your particular needs.
8. The Monthly Health Journal of the Institute entitled "How to Live."

The Standard Physical Examination Includes:

Examination of the eyes, ears, nose, throat, mouth, teeth, tongue, lungs, heart, circulation, skin, glands, stomach, liver, abdominal organs and general bodily condition.

Examination for evidence of rupture, varicose veins, fanity posture, flat-foot, spinal curvature, deformities and asymmetries.

Test of the vision and hearing, and of the brain and nervous system for paresis, locomotor ataxia and other central nervous afflictions or nervous instability.

Height, weight, chest and abdominal measurements.

Blood pressure by the Auscultatory Method.

The Institute's system of examinations and reports was formulated in consultation with the members of the Hygiene Reference Board—men who have for years been engaged in analyzing human lives and the influences that impair them. This system has been standardized from the Institute's wide experience in examining many thousands of individuals. And the physical examination is only one part of the Institute's service!

The Life Extension Institute maintains a completely equipped pathological laboratory in its main office in New York. Hundreds of physicians make use of this laboratory, for here are put through many tests which they could not make in their own offices.

A Staff of 5000 Physicians

It makes no difference where you live. The Life Extension Institute comes to you wherever you are. It has a staff of fourteen examining physicians in its main office right here in New York, a branch office in Chicago, and a staff of more than 5000 physicians throughout the United States.

The cost of membership in the Life Extension Institute is low, because of its humanitarian character and national ideals.

Examinations of subscribers who live in New York City or vicinity are made at the head office of the Institute, 25 West Forty-fifth Street—on appointment by telephone or letter—between the hours of 9 A. M. and 5 P. M.

Convenient appointments can also be arranged with the Institute's examiners in the member's home district or city. Women physicians are available in the main office for the examination of women members who prefer them.

The Life Extension Institute has a Hygiene Reference Board of 100 leading scientific men, including the Surgeon-Generals of the Army and Navy, and U. S. Public Health Service; several Ex-Presidents of the American Medical Association; Commissioners of Public Health, and others interested in the public welfare. Matters of scientific policy and educational material used in the Institute's service are submitted to this Board for opinion. A complete list will be furnished on application.

Among the many prominent business houses that have asked the Life Extension Institute to examine their vital, important employes are the Guaranty Trust Company, Franklin Motor Car Company, Solvay Process Company and the Barrett Manufacturing Company. The Standard Oil Company of New York has chosen the Institute to examine the men they have selected for important work abroad. Foreign representatives of the American Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. and other national organizations are examined by the Institute before going over-seas for war-work.

GALA TURF SEASON PROMISED IN SOUTH

Many Northern Horses Are Now In Training for Big Events on Maryland Tracks.

PREAKNESS THE BIG RACE

No Conflict with Kentucky Derby, and Many Thoroughbreds Will Probably Compete In Both.

More than 400 of the 1,000 or more thoroughbreds which will take part in the Spring meeting of the Harford Agricultural and Breeders' Association race meeting at Havre de Grace, already are quartered at that track, according to information sent from Baltimore yesterday. Although the meeting does not start until May 16 there is an aspect of racing with the workouts of the animals.

The many stables which trained at Gravesend Bay and Belmont Park during the last two months have been shipped to Maryland, and it is certain that the rest of the eligibles will be sent forward within the next few days. Transportation has been difficult to obtain because of the demands of the war, but many of the New York horsemen are circumventing this difficulty by using motor vans. This system of traffic is even more advantageous than shipping by rail, as it gives the trainers a chance to care for their stock and see to it that no accidents mar the costly animals.

It is expected that the 800 or more stalls at Havre de Grace will all be tenanted within the next few days, and that every farmer within five miles of the track will have let out stable room. New York horsemen are going to make their first bid for 1918 racing laurels at Havre de Grace, since that meeting leads up to the classic of the Maryland turf, the Pimlico affair, in which the $15,000 Preakness is to be decided.

Many New Yorkers Represented.

New York's most prominent contributions to the Havre de Grace colony in the last few days are parts of the stables of F. D. Weir, H. C. Applegate, W. E. Applegate, Richard T. Wilson, Jr., and Clifford A. Cochran. Although Weir has not shipped Old Rosebud as yet, as that famous handicap champion is said to be suffering from stomach trouble and also weak legs, the rest of the stable is in Maryland. Old Rosebud may come around soon, but Weir is doubtful if the veteran leader of the turf will be able to race for several weeks yet.

Rughouse, a stake winner of last year and contender for the Wilmington and Breakness Stakes, and the four-year-old Philiplic, are the most prominent of the Cochran string in training at Havre de Grace. Several Cochran two-year-olds, notably Gas Mask, Toonbeola, Penard, St. Quentin, and Bagheera were shipped with the two stake winners. Gas Mask, a bay son of Ormondale and Veil, and Toonbeola, a brown son of His Majesty and Connemara, are youngsters of high promise. They are entered in the Aberdeen Stakes, the best two-year-old special to be offered at Havre de Grace this season. William Midgeley took the Cochran string to Maryland.

Although it was thought that Weir would send Jack Hare, Jr., to Kentucky to prepare for the Kentucky Derby, to be run there May 11, this promising three-year-old is in Maryland, and undoubtedly will be brought around for the Preakness, which, it is expected, will be decided on May 16. The light-footed son of Marathon has matured handsomely. Jack Hare's first start at Havre de Grace, according to Weir, will be in the Wilmington, and after that race he will be trained for the Preakness.

With Jack Hare, Jr., Weir also took Hendrie, King Worth, Starter, Golden Glow, Helen Atkin, Fort Bliss, Brisk, Dick Richardson, Helen C., and several other untried youngsters. Weir's horses are well advanced in training, as they have been worked at Gravesend almost every day for the last six weeks. Before leaving for Maryland he said that he would be able to start any of his string with three days' work.

Four of Wilson String on Hand.

Mr. Wilson sent only four of his string to Maryland this early. These were the veteran Prairie and the two-year-olds Quickstep, Thistledown, and Littlecote. The other members of his string are to go soon, as Mr. Wilson has engaged thirty stalls at Havre de Grace and plans an active campaign at that meeting, as well as at the Pimlico meeting. Thomas J. Healey, trainer for Mr. Wilson, will take the rest of the string to Maryland. He has been conditioning the Wilson horses at Belmont Park for the last eight weeks, and insists that all of the stable are in condition.

Campfire, the most notable animal in the Wilsnn string, and a candidate for the Pimlico Handicap and the big races to be decided around New York later in the season, has wintered extremely well, and will be sent to Maryland carrying the high hopes of his owner. Others, to be in the second shipment, are the four-year-olds Prism, Straight Forward, and Wood Thrush. Straight Forward is to be sent after the big stakes along with Campfire.

The Simons division of the big establishment of Harry Payne Whitney has been shipped from Bennings to Havre de Grace. Simons took a dozen young but promising two-year-olds and a couple of maidens, as well as W. R. Scharton's handsome imported three-year old, Cohait, which graduated from the maiden class at Bowie last Wednesday. The Whitney two-year-olds were expected to start at Bowie, but were prevented from going to the post for their trial spins by an epidemic of catarrhal fever.

Racegoers are looking forward to the three-year-old and all age races to be decided in Maryland, and also throughout the Eastern circuit. Probably never before have there been such a great number of excellent horses ready for the barrier to go up. The three-year-olds will be tried out first of all, since two of the big races of the year for this class will be held within six weeks. The Kentucky Derby, worth $15,000, will attract Willis Sharpe Kilmer's champion, Sun Briar, from the East, and Major Kenneth Alexander's Escoba from the West, as well as a host of other eligibles of high class. Although the Preakness will be held only five days after the Derby, it is thought that there may be time for shipment from the Kentucky course to Pimlico, so the eligibles may try for both contests.

Popp Entered In Preakness.

Several Eastern stables, however, will not make a try for both stakes. In this regard it is almst certain that George W. Loft's Papp, Sun Briar's chief opponent last year, will not go in the Derby, but will be prepared for and started in the Preakness only. A. K. Macomber, with War Cloud, does not know which race he will send his promising candidate after.

The Preakness undoubtedly will attract most of the fillies, since this race is at a mile and a furlong, while the Derby is at a mile and a quarter. The fillies are hardly fitted for the longer journey at this time of the year, and for this reason it is expected that owners of the fillies will select the Preakness instead of the Derby. Rosie O'Grady, H. P. Whitney's stalwart filly, is being pointed for the Preakness, although James Rowe, her trainer, is still anxious to send the filly after the Derby in the hope of again taking that fixture with a filly, as was the case when Regret won from the colts and established a record for the Derby as the first filly ever to win the race.

The Pimlico Handicap is expected to bring together the all-age horses for the first time this season, and if the leaders go it should bring a field of thoroughbreds the like of which has seldom been seen before in this country. Practically every great three-year-old last year, including Omar Khayyam, Westy Hogan, and Houriess have been nominated for this event, as well as the handicap kings, Roamer and Old Rosebud. That these great horses will have many meetings during the Summer is certain, but the first clash of the older brigade against the young upstarts should be a memorable one.

As one of the higher racing officials put it a few days ago, America is to have racing such as this country never dreamed of a few years ago, when adverse legislation almost put the sport out of business.

RED CROSS ASPECT TO BROOKLYN SHOW

Women to Sell Articles for Fund at Annual Exhibition of Horses.

A Red Cross atmosphere will pervade the annual Brooklyn Horse Show at the Brooklyn clubhouse, April 17 to 20 inclusive, and many features have been devised to raise funds for the war work. Catalogues, cigarettes, candy, and many other articles will be sold by volunteer workers, the proceeds from which will be added to the receipts of the show.

Mrs. Charles F. Hubbs is in charge of the Sales Committee, which will conduct this part of the activities. Among those who are aiding her are Miss Caroline Weber, Mrs. Burnett C. Collins, Mrs. Winthrop Murray Tuttle, Miss Clara Peck, Mrs. John C. Loud, Mrs. Thomas Lonsdale Leeming, Mrs. George A. Anderson, and Mrs. Richard C. Kettles, Jr.

William H. Wanamaker, Jr., of Philadelphia is to be one of the out-of-town figures of the show, coming on with his harness string and with Miss Isabella Wanamaker's hunters. Other Philadelphians are expected to be present also. Miss Jean Lister Austin is expected to show her string of saddlers. Mrs. Joseph S. Sylvester of Boston will probably exhibit in the harness classes, though no positive announcement as to this is made. Judge Moore, John L. Bushnell of Springfield, Ohio, and Walter L. Hanley of Providence, all of whom have legs on the Brooklyn Eagle Cup, are also likely to be on hand.

Many Brooklyn horses will appear. Miss Helen Leeming and Miss Rachael Higgins have each a new saddle horse, Miss Higgins a small gray. Miss Leeming a bright chestnut. Miss Marjorie Beard, Miss Clara Peck, Miss Caroline Weber, Miss Virginia Hanan, Miss Ethel Hanan, Miss Louise Banks, and Mr. and Mrs. John C. Loud are all to be represented. Miss Laura Hulst Murr will show Beverly, and there is very little question but that Mrs. Edwin Gates Babcock will bring into the ring again, for almost certain victories, her Woodford, many times prize winner.

Another of the entrants is to be Sequategue Farm, better known, perhaps, as the stable of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Hubbs. The Hubbs family has for many seasons practically led at Brooklyn horse shows. They began their great chain of victories with Fantasy and have added and bred until today scarcely another exhibitor has more ribbons to his credit.

Fantasy is not showing just now, but the Hubbs's Springtime will be on hand. Springtime is now in the finest fettle. He won many ribbons at Mineola, and is probably to be a decided figure of the Brooklyn Show. Sequategue Farm is also to show Wetona, who took another blue at Mineola, Midalia; Nidalia, and the Hubbs's cow pony, the Kid. The Kid originally had the name of Kid Brown, though he is black, and was brought on here with a lot of draft ponies. He took Mr. Hubbs's fancy and has proved a great acquisition. In his class he will be a feature of the Brooklyn Show.

Thomas L. Leeming, President; Charles F. Hubbs and Hamilton H. Salmon, Chairman and Secretary of the Horse Show Committee; W. S. Blitz, Assistant Secrstary, and Franklin B. Jourdan, Treasurer, are the officials actively in charge of the show, with a working committee of nearly a hundred. In addition to Mrs. Hubbs's Sales Committee there is a committee on patronesses, which Mrs. Thomas L. Leeming heads and which includes the following:

Mrs. Edwin A. Ames, Mrs. John Anderson, Mrs. Alfred C. Beford, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. H. Edward Dreier, Mrs. Thomas R. French, Mrs. Charles F. Hubbs, Mrs. Stanley P. Jadwin, Mrs. Darwin R. James, Jr., Mrs. Franklin B. Jourdan, Mrs. F. W. Lafrentz, Mrs. Charles L. Morse, Mrs. Frederick H. Pratt, Mrs. Hamilton H. Salmon, Mrs. Joseph K. Smith, Miss Josephine T. Sutphin, Mrs. Alfred T. White, and Mrs. Leeming.

WEST TO BE REPRESENTED.

Canadian Dogs Will Also Be Seen at Ladies' Charity Show.

All signs indicate that the strong support extended by Western and Canadian exhibitors will give the high record for entries at a one-day dog show in this country to the fixture of the Ladies' Charity Show Club at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory on Saturday, April 20, for the benefit of St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children. The tabulated list by breeds is now being compiled by Superintendent Foley.

Theodore Offerman, who, with Dr. J. E. De Mund, is to judge the unclassified specials at the Charity Dog Show, returned on Friday after judging at the Chicago and St. Louis dog shows. He brought word of the Western and Canadian invasion for blue ribbons and cups. At St. Louis he was the sole judge at the show of the Airedale Terrier Club, and no less than eighty were benched.

Mr. Offerman gave winners' dogs to the Canadian entry of Norman Mackenzie, Polam Maxim, and winners' for the opposite sex, with the special for the best at the show to J. L. L. Davis's Briergate Bright Beauty. This is the dog that won the same special, with C. H. Perrin of Chicago judging at the New York Airedale Club Show in December. Nearly all the Airedales benched at St. Louis, including the big winners, will be at the Charity Dog Show.

A change is announced in the board of jurors, which will still, however, consist of twenty-seven prominent amateur exhibitors. Mrs. J. R. Williams of Bethlehem, Penn., has resigned as an arbiter and Thor place will be taken by Mrs. William Ward MacLeod of Philadelphia, who will take the Italian greyhounds, toy poodles, toy black and tan terriers, Maltese and Chihuahuas. There is a revival in favor of the dainty Italian greyhounds, which were very fashionable and parlor pets here before the civil war. Miss Constance Sala Regan of Westbury, Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Miss Stella Reynolds of Baltimore, Miss Nellie Green of Philadelphia, Miss Melba Leone Proctor of Brookline, Mass., and Mrs. G. D. Winchester of Gloucester, Mass., are newcomers to exhibit them.

BREEDING BUREAU TO EXPAND WORK

The Jockey Club's Enterprise to Increase Production of Cavalry Remounts.

When The Jockey Club inaugurated its Bureau of Breeding in 1906 and placed in various counties of the Empire State stallions of blood and quality, the response on the part of farmers and breeders was not as generous as the promoters of the venture had hoped for, but with an energy which is characteristic of the governing body of racing the work has been persevered with until today it is a beacon light marking the way to the establishment of the most useful type of general purpose horse in the United States.

The demand for cavalry remounts since the inception of the war was largely instrumental in arousing favorable sentiment for the half-bred horse, though he always had friends in the ranks of those of our people who find recreation in the hunting field, on the road, or the bridle path.

When foreign commissioners at the outbreak of the war began buying remounts in the United States, the farmer and horse breeder in every instance found that horses with a dash of warm blood commanded a ready sale at the highest figure. It was only when the supply had become almost exhausted that the versatility of the type was remembered by those who formerly possessed representatives of it. Pound for pound the half-brad—preferably those produced by crossing the thoroughbred sire on trotting dams—have been found unsurpassed for general uses. Everybody who has had to do with them, whether on the farm, the road, or in the hunting field, will testify to their quality.

It is gratifying, therefore, to note that the work of the Breeding Bureau on the recommendation of its Chairman, Frank K. Sturgis, instead of being curtailed, is to be enlarged. The benefits of the movement are being felt in Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, in an ever-increasing degree. Even far-away Wyoming is to have a choicely bred stallions having been donated to assist a plan for the production of cavalry remounts in the Big Horn Basin country.

The work in that locality has been undertaken by Thomas W. Ames, who has entered into a contract with the Federal Government for the production of army horses. Mr. Ames has had considerable experience in horse breeding, and possesses several hundred head of desirable mares which should make ideal mates for thoroughbred sires. The fact that the range is available for practically the entire year marks the venture as a distinct economic advance in the production of remounts, a matter which the Federal Government has begun to consider seriously.

Pan Handle country of Texas is only awaiting the coming of men with the courage and ambition of Mr. Ames to furnish many thousands of horses of the sort that are most desirable for the cavalry arm of the service.

While the members of The Jockey Club have always been sanguine of the ultimate success of the Breeding Bureau, their delight has been heightened by the results obtained from the plan now in use in the Genesee Valley, where a number of mares of desirable types have been placed with representative farmers, whose only obligations is to breed them to stallions of the bureau. This plan, which is under supervision of the Genesee Valley Breeders Association, of which Mrs. Herbert Wadsworth of Avon, N. Y., is the head, has made friends from its inception. The farmers and horse breeders of that fertile region knew little of the merits of the half-bred and clean-bred horse as a utility animal until the last two years.

At the present time thirty-four stallions are doing duty under the auspices of the bureau, of which nineteen are in New York, seven in Maryland, four in Pennsylvania, one in Ohio and twelve in other parts of the Union. It is safe to say that this number will be added to materially during the season, by fact, the sterling performer, Mac, by imported McGee, a son of The White Knight, has within the past few days been donated by G. W. J. Russell of Pittsburgh.

FAMOUS DERBY WINNER DEAD

Richard Croker's Orby, British Turf Leader of 1907, Dies.

DUBLIN, April 6.—News has just reached here from Glencairn, the famous Irish stud farm of Richard Croker, the former Tammany chief of New York, that Orby, propably the most famous stallion ever bred in Ireland, was found dead in his box stall this morning. Orby won the English Derby, the classic of the running turf of the world, in 1907, and was one of the few horses in the history of the turf belonging to an American to achieve this honor. Only one American bred and owned horse ever finished in the van in the British classic, that being Iroquois, belonging to Pierre Lorillard.

Orby had a most succehhful career on the running turf of both England and Irsland, and was thought so much of by his owner that, when Mr. Croker sold his racing string just before he left for America in 1916, Orby was practically the only animal retained. Several of the get of Orby have distinguished themselves on the local turf, especially a filly which took the English Oaks in 1916. The get of Orby also raced among the best in Ireland during 1916.

Orby was almost an American-bred horse, since he was by Orme, an English stallion, out of Rhoda B., an American-bred mare. Rhoda B. was by Hanover, one of the famous American stallions of a decade ago.

Caddock May Meet Lewis.

Jack Curley, the local wrestling promoter, has announced that he is negotiating for a match between Earl Caddock, the Iowa grappler, who is now in the army at Camp Dodge, and Ed "Strangler" Lewis, the Kentucky wrestler. Curley left this city last night for the purpose of consulting Caddock on the possibility of such a match. If the match is made it will be held in Madison Square Garden.

HARNESS STAKES NAMED.

Philadelphia Grand Circuit Fixtures Arranged for Meeting.

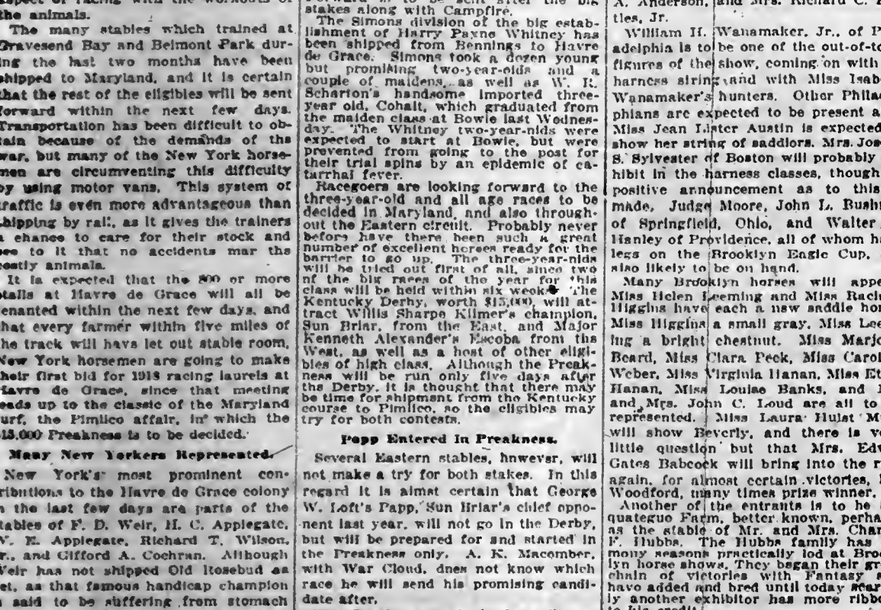
The list of early closing events to be held during the Grand Circuit meeting of the Belmont Driving Club of Philadelphia, August 12 to 16, inclusive, has just been announced. There are nine events of a graduated value from $1,000 to $5,000, fitted for almost every class of harness horses. The outstanding event is to be the Winoga Stock Farm 2:11 trot, with a value of $5,000. Next comes the Bellevue-Stratford Hotel 2:06 trot and the Adelphia Hotel 2:03 pace, each worth $3,000.

Five stakes of $2,000 each are arranged for pacers and trotters, one of these being The Liberty for two-year-olds in which the winners will be paid in Liberty bonds, a custom to be adopted universally over the Grand Circuit this season. There will be a special event for 2:20 class trotters open only to horses owned in Philadelphia County, to be trained and driven by men who did not win a Grand Circuit race during the season of 1917.

The entries close tomorrow with A. Saunders, 1,227 Market Street, Philadelphia. The Belmont Driving Park meeting follows the meeting at Cleveland, and comes just ahead of the Poughkeepsie meeting. Eight open classes and specials are to close on July 29. These are to have purses from $1,000 to $2,500.

Change Course for Road Run.

A change was announced last night in the course for the Intersectional Athletic League handicap road race which will be conducted under the auspices of the Glencoe A. C. of Harlem this afternoon. On remeasuring the course officials of the league discovered that it was slightly over six miles instead of the five and one-half miles originally planned. This caused a change from Seventy-ninth Street and Central Park West to Eighty-sixth Street.



BOILING POINTS DETERMINE GASOLINE QUALITY

WATER has but one boiling point—212° F. Gasoline, however, has several boiling points, varying from 100° to 400° F.

This is because gasoline is not a simple, but a complex product. It is made up of "light ends" that boil or vaporize rapidly; medium and "heavy ends" that vaporize more slowly.

Low-grade or sluggish gasoline has not the right proportions. It is nearly all "heavy ends." That is why starting on sluggish gasoline is like trying to start a coal fire without paper or kindling.

Tydol contains just the right amount of "light ends", corresponding to paper and kindling in a fire, and the correct amount of body, corresponding to the coal, to make starting easy in cold weather and to render combustion complete and effective when operating.

When you fill your tank today, try Tydol. More dealers are displaying the orange and black sign every day.

The thorough character of service put on every car we sell justifies the confidence imposed in the Burrelle organization.

The USED CAR—
and YOUR SECURITY

The Burrelle Organization dominates the fine used car market of New York. It has no interest in "mob" cars, whose original low price makes necessary a compromise with quality.

Only the better Foreign and American cars are ever permitted space in the Burrelle Showroom—and then only after they have been rigidly conditioned by our own Service Department.

One may buy of Burrelle with the identic feeling of safety that one has in buying from the more reputable dealers in new cars.

Burrelle
A Guaranty Name on Used Cars

THE Burrelle Organization had its counterparts in France and England before the war, where the patronage of fastidious motor car owners made serious inroads on the selling of new cars. But in America, it is quite individual. As it refrains from handling the customary type of used cars, so does it carefully refrain from the questionable methods generally employed in used car transactions.

ANY car sold by Burrelle is countersigned by Burrelle, which means that the responsibility of reputation rests always on the Burrelle Organization. Therefore Burrelle prices are comparable to the original prices of the cars rather than to the prices of similar used cars. Even so, the savings afforded the purchaser are always considerable enough to be attractive, yet safe!

RELAYS ATTRACT A RECORD ENTRY

Total of 310 Institutions Represented on List for Penn's Annual Carnival.

CLASSIFICATION COMPLETE

Events at Two-Day Meet Distributed That 32 Occur on Friday and 40 on Saturday.

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.—Pennsylvania's relay management has completed the final revision of the college and school groups for the annual carnival. The final entry list is the largest ever received for Pennsylvania's famous sports, as 62 colleges, 98 high schools, 51 preparatory schools, 66 grammar schools, 25 parochial schools, and 8 camps have sent word that they will be on hand, a total of 310 institutions.

On the two days of the meet, April 26 and 27, there will be seventy-two events, thirty-two on Friday and forty on Saturday. It is emphasized that Friday is in no sense preliminary to Saturday. The thirty-two events include some of the most important of the big carnival and they will all be finished on that day. This year, because of the prominence given to the military and naval events, the pentathlon and the sprint and medley relay championships, Friday takes equal rank with Saturday and should be equally as interesting.

The desire of the Middle Atlantic State Conference A. A. and the South Atlantic Intercollegiate A. A. that their one-mile relay championships be run off at Pennsylvania's carnival broke up several of the classes as originally planned. On this account the changes in the college groups are more numerous than usual. Great care has been taken to put colleges of equal speed together. The unexpectedly large entry from the parochial schools necessitated that in addition to the championship race two group races should be arranged.

This was done with the assistance of Michael J. Slattery of the Catholic Archdiocesan Union. Mr. Slattery has taken a very keen interest in the parochial events and the increased entry is due to his efforts.

The remarkable showing of the Baltimore Polytechnic Institute in relay races during the Winter compelled the relay management to place them in the championship class, as the school groups objected to being ranked with them. Baltimore Poly should have a good chance for the championship, as they have run very fast races all Winter. Their entry makes this championship one of the best of the entire meeting.

The final entries for the college championships are not all in yet, but practically all of the large colleges of the East and West have sent word that they will be on hand. These entries have been called for by next Monday, as on Tuesday next the drawing for position at the pole will take place. Any team entries received after that date, if accepted, will be regarded as post entries and they will be put on the outside.

In the one, two, and four mile college relay championships of America, the freshman championship, the sprint medley, and the distance medley championship and the special events, entries are not yet all in, but Yale, Cornell, Princeton, Chicago, Wisconsin, Indiana, Michigan, State, Pittsburgh, University of the South, Notre Dame, Dartmouth, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Syracuse, and other colleges will compete.

DEARTH OF STARS IN INDOOR MEETS

Season Ends with Few Performances of Merit Recorded for the Year.

The seventh annual indoor athletic meet of the Greek-American A. C. at the Seventy-first Regimental Armory last night, dropped the curtain on the local indoor athletic season. While a success as far as was expected by local A. A. U. officials, the season was nevertheless below the standard of former years.

There was a decrease in the number of meets, and in those that were promoted programs varied decidedly from the programs of less troublesome days. Soldier and sailor athletes were particularly catered to, and this, while popular, nevertheless caused a dearth in the performances of stars to which New York athletic followers had been accustomed.

The Millrose A. A. and New York A. C. annual indoor carnivals in past years have been the premier athletic events of the local season. In fact, few meets held in the eastern section of the country surpassed them. This season, however, the officials of both organizations arranged their programs particularly for the country's fighters of the army and navy. Both meets resulted in substantial sums being raised for war activities work.

The John Wanamakor Commercial Institute meet and the national senior indoor A. A. U. championships, held within a few days of each other in March, were the season's leading athletic meets. In the Commercial Institute carnival an unusually attractive program was carried out for A. A. U. athletes and the result was a meet that in competitive interest excelled any ever held by the organization. The national championships were not so successful. This was directly due to the war, as seven of the champions of last year, now in either the army or navy, were unable to compete.

The Meadowbrook Club's two-day carnival in Philadelphia and the Central High School's athletic meet in Newark also furnished plenty of open A. A. U. competition and attracted unusual interest from the athletes striving for prizes. During February the Metropolitan Association of the A. A. U. attempted a series of indoor preparedness meets. These competitions, however, failed of their purpose, although at the third meet increased interest was shown.

Jole Ray, the Illinois A. C. flyer, carried off the individual glory of the season. He furnished a scintillating brand of competition which made him the most talked of athlete of the year. Twice he went after the record marks of John W. Overton, but on only one occasion were his efforts crowned with success. In his first important Eastern race of the season, the special one-mile event at the Meadow Brook Club games, his time was 4:17 4-5, as against Overton's 4:16.

At the national indoor championship meet Ray made another effort at an Overton record, and this time he was successful, to the extent of equaling the figures. This was in the 1,000-yard run, which Ray won handily in 2:14.

Ray accomplished his most important feat of the season at the John Wanamaker games, when he erased the record of Joe Driscoll for a race over 1,320 yards. Ray, carried along at a stiff gait early in the race by Mike Devaney, was clocked in 3:04 4-5, two and one-fifth seconds faster than Driscoll had done.

One of the biggest disappointments of the season was the failure of Clinton Larsen, the former Brigham Young University high jumper, now attached to the country's aviation corps at Waco, Texas. Larsen, after his long and tedious railroad journey to this city, completely fell down in his championship effort, and had to be content with fourth place.

The 13th Regiment of Brooklyn announces an indoor meet for April 25. The number of events which will comprise the program has not been determined as yet. The majority of the events will be closed to members of the regiment.

April 27 will be a busy day in local athletic circles, with scholastic athletes occupying the centre of the stage. The District Athletic League schoolboy meet will be decided in the Twenty-second Regiment Armory, and at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory the Roosevelt Athletic League annual games will be held. In addition the 7th Regiment will hold its annual indoor meet.

April 28 prospective participants in The Evening Mail marathon race will have a chance for a workout when the Morningside A. C. will conduct a six and one-half miles handicap road race over the club's course. This is declared by A. A. U. officials to be the gala handicap chase of the season. Sixteen prizes will be distributed.

The Evening Mail-modified marathon, which will be held May 4, has already attracted more than 500 entries of athletes in the eastern part of the country. The majority of these are from clubs in the metropolitan district, but there is a scattering of out-of-town entries. Army and navy entries have been slow in coming in, but it is expected that an increase in these entries will be noted shortly.

PEDDIE LOSES ITS COACH.

Plant to Go to France as Y. M. C. A. Instructor.

HIGHTSTOWN, N. J., April 6.—John D. Plant, one of the leading preparatory school coaches in the country, has been released from his service at Peddie Institute, where he has been connected with athletics for the past sixteen years, to go into the overseas Y. M. C. A. service. The school has released him for the duration of the war, when he will again take up the work here. Mr. Plant entered Peddie as a student in 1902 and was a prominent member of the football team. During the five years he attended Peddie he became known as a professional basketball player and was for a number of years a guard on the old Bristol five of Bristol, Penn.

Mr. Plant has coached both the basketball teams and the track teams personally, and the success of the school football and baseball teams has been largely due to the fact that he has had charge of the training of each player. Within the last ten years he has coached three teams which have won the Pennsylvania relays.

ATHLETES OF NOTE TO TRAIN SOLDIERS

Campaign of Y. M. C. A. for Directors to Go Abroad Gains Impetus.

DAVE FULTZ IS ON LIST

Frank Quinby, Ellery Huntington, Jack Magee, and Sparrow Robertson Also Enrolled.

W. S. Langford, Big Bill Edwards and their associates on the college committee on recruiting for Y. M. C. A. work overseas, reported a cleanup yesterday and announced the addition of the names to their list of such prominent men in the athletic world as David L. Fultz, Frank Quinby, baseball coach at Yale; Ellery C. Huntington of Colgate, Jack Magee of Bowdoin, and Sparrow Robertson. Among the prominent college athletes of recent years who have enlisted to supervise the play of Uncle Sam's fighting men abroad are Harold H. Short, Floyd Risley, and W. H. Sayon, Jr., of Princeton, George M. Clark of Yale, E. H. Jewett of Columbia, who has two sons in the service; Archie Hahn of Michigan, James A. Blatherwick of Dartmouth, and J. B. Pugsley of Colby.

All these men and many others have agreed to handle for the Y. M. C. A. the athletic work in France with the expeditionary forces. Over there many a director has found that in forming a regimental track team every man has appeared in a running suit on a field day. Baseball games are the regular thing, often so close to the front line trenches that the crash of bat against ball vies with the bursting of a German shrapnel shell. Under the direction of the Y. M. C. A. a half-mile track has been constructed near the sector which the Americans are guarding exclusively. As our forces increase more tracks will be constructed, under the supervision of Sparrow Robertson.

As an indication of the wide range of years covered by the men who are going to France to do their bit, comparison may be made between Mr. Huntington and Harold H. Short. The latter is a few years over the draft age, having been graduated from Princeton in 1905.

Mr. Huntington went out from Amherst in 1888 and for many years has been physical instructor at Colgate University. He is forty-two years old. His son, Ellery, Jr., was named an all-American halfback a few years ago by Walter Camp. He is now in the plunging with the American army. The elder Huntington made application early in the campaign of the committee on recruiting. Acceptance of his application shows that there is no age limit for service overseas. The applicant must pass a rigid physical examination to satisfy the War Personnel Board of his ability to endure hardship.

Short was a famous lineman on Princeton football teams in the early years of the present century. After his graduation he was in great demand as a coach at his Alma Mater. In the same year that Short went out from Princeton, Blatherwick was graduated at Dartmouth, where he had been a prominent member of the baseball team. Since then he has roughed it as a mining engineer.

The career of Dave Fultz is almost too well known to require comment. He was strongly recommended to the Personnel Board by Langford. Fultz worked his way through Brown University, starred on both baseball and football teams, and then went into professional baseball to enable him to study law. He was at one time a member of the New York Americans. He retired from the diamond after he received his law degree, but has never lost his interest in athletics. He has been an official in many of the biggest football games of recent years.

Just four years before Dave Fultz left Brown, E. H. Jewett was graduated at Columbia, back in 1894. Jewett is another of the contributions to the forces the Y. M. C. A. is marshalling for the much-needed service overseas. He was a versatile athlete on Morningside Heights, making both baseball and football teams. A son is in France with the Rainbow Division. Another is in Texas with the aviation forces.

George M. Clark, Yale, 1901, has left his business and family to go over and do his part. Like many others who have enlisted under the banner of the Red Triangle, he is paying his own expenses, able to do so in the knowledge that the welfare of his firm will run along without him. Another man well known to Yale, and obtained through the efforts of Erink Thorne, is Frank Quinby. Yale baseball won't seem the same without Quinby, but the bigger league has drafted him.

Along with Quinby goes Jack Magee, known throughout New England as one of the best small college track coaches to be obtained. Jack has been at Bowdoin for several years. With a student body that has been reduced to less than 300 by the call of the colors, Magee has developed many promising athletes, and has a large number of men working on the track without the hope of ever being taken on a trip.

The I. A. A. C. contributed last week Tom J. Kelly, Captain of the club's junior track team and holder of the 600-yard record in the Sixty-ninth Regiment. Kelly requires extra strong glasses in order to see, or he would be in uniform. His athletic experience and that of Jack Coombs of Philadelphia is expected to be of great value in France. Coombs has been physical director for the Curtis Publishing Company.

PRINCETON CREW IMPROVES FORM

Evening Work Made Possible by Daylight Saving Law Aids Oarsmen.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 6.—Marked improvement has been shown by the Tiger 'Varsity crew this week as a result of the thorough drilling it received during the Easter holidays and the evening practices which commenced on Monday. By taking advantage of the daylight saving the Princeton oarsmen have been able to assemble the entire eight at the same time, a thing they were not able to do previous to the Easter vacation. They are holding their practice from 6 to 7 in the evening after military work is finished for the day. Just now it is rather a cool time of the day to get out on the water, but when the warmer weather comes the new hour will possess decided advantages, Roberts, 2; Clarke, bow, and Creasey, coxswain.

Both Coach John Fitzpatrick and Captain Bob Roche are greatly encouraged by the showing of the crew this week, but there is still no overwhelming optimism in the Tiger camp. There are sixteen men eligible for the first crew who are reporting for daily workouts, just enough to seat two boats, and while all of these are giving their best to produce a winning combination, the lack of material is handicapping the work of Mr. Fitzpatrick. The eight by no means sizes up to former Princeton crews, which were composed of tall, rangy youths, all of them six feet or over in height and well adapted to Princeton's style of rowing. This year's eight is shorter and lighter than usual, and it does not possess the finished oarsmanship of past seasons.

During every afternoon of this week about eight miles have been covered over the Carnegie Lake course. Greater co-ordination, which has materially improved the run of the boat between strokes has been obtained, and in other respects the long practices have worked improvements.

The Harvard manager was in Princeton this week looking over the six shells that the Tigers have available, with a view to selecting a boat to be used by the Crimson eight in the regatta on Carnegie Lake on April 27. He selected the boat used by the 1915 'Varsity. As Princeton shells are rigged to starboard and Harvard rigs her shells to port, the Harvard rigger will come here shortly to alter the boat to suit the needs of the Cambridge oarsmen.

The Harvard squad, composed of a 'Varsity and freshman crew, is to arrive in Princeton on Thursday, April 25, two days before the race. This will give them at least two workouts, and possibly three, on the lake. They will be quartered in the various dormitories as guests of the Tigers, and will eat in the upperclass clubs.

Nothing further has been heard from New Haven concerning the possibility of the Elis entering the Princeton-Cornell race that is to be held here on May 25. Yale has a regatta scheduled with Harvard on June 1, and she is unwilling to participate in the classic on Carnegie Lake for this reason. The Tigers' other date is for the Childs Cup race that is to be held here on May 4, with Columbia and the University of Pennsylvania as the other contestants.

The seating of the 'Varsity and freshman boats at present is as follows:

'Varsity—Paxton, stroke; Captain Roche, 7; Lamont, 6; Bryan, 5; Walter, 4; Duncan, 3; Gardner, 2; Godfrey, bow, and Hammer, coxswain.

Freshman—Fleming, stroke; Haines, 7; Chisholm, 6; Strong, 5; McCormick, 4; Heim, 3; Roberts, 2; Clarke, bow, and Creasey, coxswain.

NET MATCH FOR COLUMBIA.

Tennis Team Lines Up Against Rutgers Tomorrow.

'Varsity tennis starts tomorrow at Columbia with a match with the Rutgers team. Columbia will probably go into the match with two of her best men off the court, as Botsford, who won the college championship last year, and Raymond, another Columbia star, are not expected to play.

On April 11 Fordham's tennis team will come to the Columbia courts, and on April 13 the Light Blue and White is scheduled for a match with Stevens. This will also be played at Columbia.

What the Threads Are For

Every one of the 196,000 threads in the Threaded Rubber Insulation of the Still Better Willard has a definite mission.

Every thread allows free passage to the battery solution. Through this multitude of tiny paths the chemical action which means a good, strong current goes on with perfect freedom.

No insulation ever used has equalled hard rubber in ability to resist every-day wear and tear. No method of conducting current through the hard rubber has the efficiency of the tiny threads. And the combination is found only in the Still Better Willard Battery. Let us tell you more about this insulation and the battery that uses it.

LEONARD TO DEFEND TITLE IN TWO BOUTS

Champion to Meet Pair of Quaker Opponents in First Return to Ring.

FIGHTS BORRELL TOMORROW

Olympia A. A. to Stage Initial Contest, While Brazzo Is Opponent for National A. A.

Through a let-up in his army work at Camp Upton, Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, is now free to engage in boxing bouts. The Harlem champion, who has not competed in a bout since he received his appointment as boxing instructor, has arranged, through his manager, Billy Gibson, for two contests during the coming week. These, while not considered dangerous bouts, will afford him an opportunity to accustom himself to the tricks of his trade, which have been dulled during the last few months.

Both of Leonard's bouts will be staged in Philadelphia. Tomorrow night he will enter the ring of the Olympia A. A. against Young Joe Borrell, a Philadelphia lightweight boxer. On Saturday night Leonard will box Jack Brazzo at the National A. A. For the Borrell contest the champion has been guaranteed $1,250, and it is likely a similar agreement has been reached for the match with Brazzo.

Neither of Leonard's opponents is known outside of Philadelphia. Their reputations there, however, are impressive. Leonard has taken on both these matches for the purpose of testing his ability after his long absence from the ring. It is likely that after these contests Leonard will arrange matches with some of his leading challengers for the title.

Leonard started working for the bouts last week, and almost with the first day in the gymnasium it became apparent that he needed some stiff workouts to fit him. His work at Camp Upton was of a nature to stiffen his muscles and add to his weight, in addition to making him perceptibly slower in his boxing. The champion expects that a few trips over the roads will loosen his muscles. Leonard has also mapped out a hard campaign in the gymnasium, which includes daily boxing exhibitions with his sparring partner, Freddie Reese.

Colonel J. C. Miller, partner with Jess Willard in the promotion of the latter's scheduled championship bout with Fred Fulton, has failed up to date to make public the location of the battleground where the men will settle the question of supremacy on July 4. Colonel Miller is in Chicago, where it is presumed he consulted with Willard, but nothing of definite importance concerning the bout has been announced. Colonel Miller has about decided on Denver or Colorado Springs as the scene of the bout, but he has carefully refrained from choosing either place definitely.

The East is practically out of the running, for the reason that Connecticut does not hold the facilities for the bout; Baltimore, through its officials, has given it to be understood that it does not intend to tolerate the contest, and New Jersey is not being considered for the reason that eight rounds is the limit placed on bouts there. The South, too, is out of consideration, evidently, inasmuch as Colonel Miller has stated that the Southern promoters were looking for the bout for a date in November.

The recent appointment of the three Commissioners who will control the sport in the State across the Hudson is the initial step in giving New Jersey and New York enthusiasts a chance to enjoy their favorite sport under legal conditions. The prevailing opinion is that Governor Edge selected wisely in his choices for Commissioners, and in the plans he has discussed with them there is every promise that the sport will find favor and be conducted along proper lines.

Already enterprising promoters have decided on sites for boxing clubs, and in some instances arrangements for matches are progressing. One of these matches, which will be held shortly, will bring together Joe Lynch, the local contender for bantamweight championship honors, and Frankie Burns, the veteran Jersey City bantamweight. Burns had a large following in New Jersey and, during the days when boxing was running on a large scale in Manhattan, the Jerseyites came over the Hudson in droves to see the veteran Burns display his ability whenever he was matched.

Johnny Dundee, the local Italian lightweight, and Joe Welling of Chicago, now a member of Uncle Sam's naval forces, have been matched for another ring meeting. Scotty Montieth, manager for Dundee, announced last night that the Italian will oppose his Chicago rival in the ring of the Armory A. A. of Boston April 30. The contest will be for twelve rounds.

Frankie Callahan, the Brooklyn boxer, will be the next of the local ring exponents to oppose Lew Tendler, the Philadelphia lightweight. They have been matched for a six-round exhibition at the National A. A. April 24.

Two bouts have been arranged for Irish Patsy Cline for the near future which promise to keep the Harlemite busy. He is scheduled to oppose the veteran Phil Bloom of Brooklyn at Chelsea, Mass., in a ten-round bout tomorrow night, and on April 16 Vincent Porkoni, a Cleveland boxer, will be his opponent. The latter contest will be decided in Cleveland.

Ted (Kid) Lewis, the welterweight champion, has been matched to again box Joe Eagan, the Milwaukee welterweight, for ten rounds. They will be opponents at Milwaukee on April 16. Lewis is now in training for the match.

On Wednesday night at Baltimore Johnny Ertle, the diminutive St. Paul bantamweight, and Pal Moore of Memphis will be opponents in a fifteen-round contest to a decision. Both boxers have agreed to weigh in before the bout at 117 pounds.

COLUMBIA MEN GET LETTERS

Thirty-five Athletes Rewarded for Winter Work.

The Columbia University Committee on Athletics has awarded thirty-five athletic insignia and three class numerals to men who played on Varsity teams during the Winter season. The Committee's report had especial interest because for the first time it gave a minor sport "C" to members of the Varsity fencing team, which brought the intercollegiate championship to Columbia. The fencers who got their letter in addition to the regular "CFT" were H. W. Forster, M. J. Bloomer, Jr., and J. Horcasitas.

Members of the water polo team were awarded a new insignia, a "WCt," instead of the regular swimming award, which had heretofore gone to the polo players. The awards were:

Wrestling.—M. Rosenzweig, M. Louria, L. Jansen, P. B. Kindleberger, K. L. Kwong, T. Harish, (Captain.) L. W. Zychlinski, and M. Bloch, (manager.)

Water Polo.—L. T. Rosen, (Captain.) J. Hyde, A. Kinzel, H. Steiner, J. Kennedy, P. B. Kindleberger, W. B. Brown, and B. Howard.

Fencing.—H. W. Forster, (Captain,) M. J. Bloomer, Jr., J. Horcasitas, (1921 team,) E. T. Stelle, G. Kappes, and J. Biles.

Basket Ball.—R. Aebli, C. Furer, F. Kiendl, J. Newman, N. A. Alexander, J. Horcasitas, C. C. Latour, S. Weinstein. Basket Ball C.—C. C. Latour, M. J. Roberts, (Captain-elect and now in service,) C. Furer, and C. Raymond, (manager.)

FORDHAM NET TEAM DRILLS FOR MEETS

With Binzen and Taylor Maroon Expects Results from Tennis Squad.

The Fordham University tennis players expect to get on the outdoor courts this week for their first practice. No indoor workouts have been held, and, as the season will start shortly and a pretentious schedule is in preparation, the Bronx collegians are especially eager for their opening drill.

Tennis, from present indications, is likely to hold the same interest that it has enjoyed since the construction of the new courts two years ago. These courts and the clubhouse, which are on the new athletic field and face Bronx Park, caused a big boom in the sport at Fordham. As a result an increased number of candidates have reported, and a number of promising players have been developed.

Elliott Binzen, a three-years' veteran, is still eligible. Binzen was the junior national indoor champion in 1915 and 1916, and has been fairly successful in open local tournaments. Matty Taylor, another good player and partner of Binzen in the doubles, will also be available. McGloughlin and Martin are two other members of the 1917 squad. With these players as a nucleus and one or two more good racquet wielders sure to be procured from the newcomers, the task of securing a team should not be difficult.

Last year Fordham was obliged to abandon its tennis campaign early in the season, but Jeremiah O'Shea, the Maroon manager, is working hard on a pretentious slate. Besides securing the four local colleges, Columbia, New York University, City College, and Stevens Institute, in home-and-home contests, matches have also been arranged with Yale and Georgetown.

MANY TRAIN AT WILLIAMS.

Forty Candidates Trying for Places on Track Team.

WILLIAMSTOWN, April 6.—Although enlistments have made heavy inroads into the Williams track team, a squad of forty men is working out daily under the direction of Coach Seeley. A few veterans remain, but most of the candidates are underclassmen. Stearns is a good man in the sprints, while Captain Stewart, Kelser, Van Hoesen, and Martyn are sure to give a creditable account of themselves in the middle distance runs.

Spink, who has won points in the pole vault for the last two years and who was the leading candidate for next season's captainey, has left college to enlist in the Aviation Corps.

Mountaineers Schedule Twenty-six Baseball Games for Season.

MORGANTOWN, April 6.—West Virginia's "Mountaineer" baseball team has a schedule of twenty-six games, according to an announcement here today. Sixteen of this number are to be played on the home field. An Eastern trip is to be taken. On this jaunt Syracuse, Colgate, Army, Dartmouth, Worcester Poly, Wesleyan, Fordham, the Usaacs, and navy are to be met in succession, comprising easily the most strenuous and the most attractive trip ever arranged for a West Virginia nine.

The home schedule has three games with Virginia, two with Colgate, and the promise of a brace of contests with the Camp Sherman team from Chillicothe. Virginia has never played in Morgantown in any branch of sport, and her coming here will take the place in large measure of the usual games with Pitt, W. and J., and Penn State.

The complete schedule follows:

April 12 and 13, Ohio University at Morgantown; April 19 and 20, Marshall College at Morgantown; April 23, Syracuse at Syracuse; April 26, Colgate at Hamilton; April 27, Army at West Point; April 29, Dartmouth at Hanover; April 30, Worcester Poly at Worcester.

May 1, Wesleyan at Middletown; May 2, Fordham at New York; May 3, Usaacs at Allentown, Penn., (pending;) May 4, Navy at Annapolis; May 9, 10, and 11, Virginia at Morgantown; May 13 and 14, Colgate at Morgantown; May 17 and 18, Camp Sherman at Morgantown, (pending;) May 23 and 24, Pittsburg Collegians at Morgantown; May 25, Norwood Park at Clarksburg, W. Va.; May 31 and June 1, Bethany at Morgantown.

TENNIS SCHEDULE DELAYED.

List of Events for Season to be Announced Next Week.

It was announced yesterday that the schedule of tennis fixtures for the coming season, which was to have been announced for publication today, would not be given out until next Sunday. The task of arranging the series of events has proved to be of heavy proportions, both Julian S. Myrick and the Field Secretary, Paul B. Williams, having devoted much time to the list of dates during last week.

It is understood that it is now nearing completion, and that the arrangements will be such that there will be few conflicts of important tournaments. With a full schedule such as was sent forth in the Spring of last year there were necessarily many conflicts, but with only a little more than half of the events to schedule this year it will be possible to give practically unobstructed sway to the big tournaments of the year.

Announce Union Track Dates.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., April 6.—The Union College track team, which this year promises to bring out several stars of the cinder path, is to have four dual meets. The first will be held here with Williams on May 11; on May 18 the annual interclass meet is to be held; May 25 the team will journey to Troy to meet the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, and May 30 Hamilton will come to Schenectady.

COLLEGES TO PLAY FOR TENNIS TITLE

Championship, Abandoned a Year Ago, Will Be Restored This Season.

MERION TO HAVE TOURNEY

Interscholastic Events Are Also to be Resumed—Harvard and Yale Will Hold Events.

Tennis promises this season to resume the place as an intercollegiate sport which was lost when colleges sent athletics into the discard last Spring. When it became evident that the United States was going into the great war most colleges lost all interest in athletics, and tennis suffered with the rest, practically all schedules being canceled.

This Spring, however, things are different. The colleges have heeded the lessons of the year, with the result that intercollegiate competition goes back to a pre-war basis. The Intercollegiate Tennis Association, which includes Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Cornell, Pennsylvania, Dartmouth, and Williams, has applied to the United States National Lawn Tennis Association for sanction of the intercollegiate championship. This will be played, as usual, on the courts of the Merion Cricket Club at Haverford, Penn., in September.

Charles S. Garland of Pittsburgh, national junior champion, who is a student at Yale, has been named as Secretary of the association, succeeding F. W. Hopkins, who is about to enter a training camp. In addition to the usual activity in tennis at New Haven, Yale is to resume this Spring the interscholastic tournament, which for a number of years has been a feature there.

Harvard also will hold an interscholastic event, and other universities are planning similar tournaments. Since the present plan of junior and boys' competition was established by the National Association, the interscholastics have been held on the same basis as junior events, with the exception that entrants must be attending schools which prepare for college. From the inquiries received at the office of the National Association it appears that these tournaments will be quite numerous.

Another straw to show how the wind is blowing is the meeting of the New England Intercollegiate Lawn Tennis Association recently held at Boston. Although not closely knit, this organization has been active for eighteen years, during which it has been the guiding force in the tennis of New England colleges. The encouraging point about the recent meeting was that the association decided to establish a real organization which indicates no lack of interest among its members.

The colleges represented at this session were Tufts, Amherst, Trinity, M. I. T., Bowdoin, and Dartmouth. Application has been made for sanction of the championship, usually held on the courts of the Longwood Cricket Club, and it will be played this year. Last Spring it was called off because of the war.

Harvard, Princeton, Pennsylvania, and Yale are arranging schedules that compare favorably with those in force in other seasons. It is too early to decide the personnel of their teams, but plenty of interest is being shown by the undergraduates. Columbia, Fordham, and C. C. N. Y. are preparing schedules, and the other institutions in the metropolitan district are expected to be in the field.

More than 100 students played in the Fall tournament at Holy Cross, and to meet the demand this Spring, four new courts will be put in commission. That this interest is by no means confined to the East is indicated by the reorganization of a tennis association by the students of the University of Utah, who temporarily dropped the sport. At Leland Stanford and the University of California competition for the teams has been in progress for some time.

Instances such as these picked from the reports that come to the office of the National Association, show a renewed intercat in intercollegiate tennis throughout the country, and promise plenty of activity for the coming season.

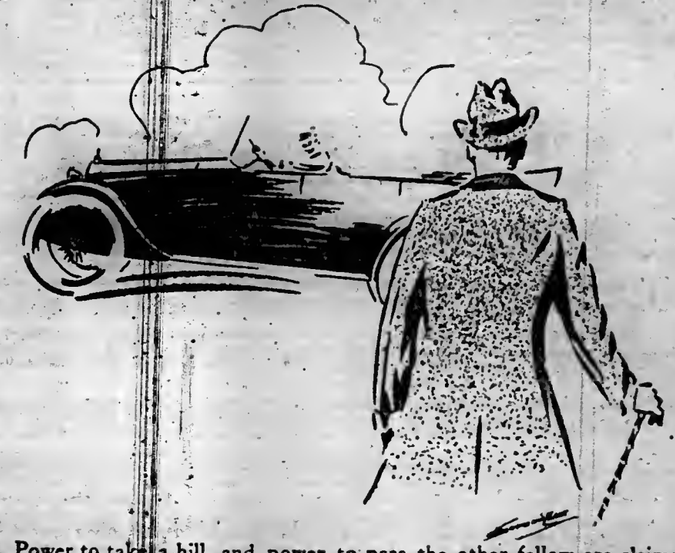
An engine that translates gas into a new kind of thrilling power through the Hot-Spot and Ram's Horn Manifold—Chalmers devices



Power to take a hill, and power to pass the other fellow are claimed by many car makers; but here's a car that puts such expressions into the dark ages of automobiling.

It is the current Chalmers, equipped with the famous Hot-Spot and Ram's-Horn Manifold, which wrings from gas more power than was ever taken out of gas before.

But not merely brutal power (for that it has), but a newer kind, a softness of power that is as thrilling to bear witness to as the technique of a great musician.

Accomplished how? By those two great devices: a Hot-Spot which fairly cooks the gas, then "cracks it up as fine as a powder", and the Ram's-Horn Manifold which "sets it down" in the combustion chambers with celerity and without disturbance.

So that when the spark touches it off, it gives nothing but power; soft, harnessed, controlled power that you will never forget once you have had its feel.

TEST FOR BILLIARD STARS IS AT HAND

Cochran Will Play Young Jake Schaefer and Koji Yamada at Daly's This Week.

KEEN MATCHES PROMISED

All Three Have Shown High Averages and Runs at 18.2 Balkline —Winner May Meet Hoppe.

With the billiard season fast waning, New York is to have one treat of professional balkline before the curtain is finally rung down. Welker Cochran, one of the foremost contenders in the professional ranks, has been matched against two of his skillful rivals in matches to be played at Maurice Daly's Academy this week. During the first three days, that is, tomorrow, Tuesday, and Wednesday, Cochran will play an 1,800 point match at 18.2 balkline against Koji Yamada, and during the last three days of the week will pit his strength against Young Jake Schaefer in a contest of like duration. The conditions call for the men to play 300 points during each afternoon and evening.

There has been a disposition by Eastern men, who have seen Cochran in practice recently, to consider that he is the natural contender against Hoppe for the world's championship. It assuredly has appeared as if his skill entitled him to a match with the champion, but whether Cochran is really next in point of proficiency to Hoppe remains for the present series of matches at Daly's to prove. Although it does not appear so in writing, it is understood that the two losers have agreed to step aside and let the winner have a chance at the championship in a match which cannot possibly be played before next Fall.

Championship or no, there is assuredly a treat in store for the ardent billiard follower in the matches that will be played between these three leading contestants. Some two years ago Cochran was just beginning to bud forth as a player of exceptional worth. It does not require a great tax on memory to recall when he was talked of as a possible entrant in one of the national Class A amateur tournaments. The billiard public is loath to concede that a player has arrived, and it was not until the last year and a half that Cochran was given a place of exceptionally high esteem.

Cassignol Brought Out Cochran.

It was the visit of the late Firmin Cassignol to this country that really cemented and finished the rather fragmentary game that Cochran had been playing up to that time. From the great French master the youthful American got a real insight into the fineness of close play. Strictly of the European school, Cassignol imparted all that he had to give in the way of instruction during his many trips with Cochran, and the latter profited thereby amazingly. His stroke was softened, but his touch was still firm, and the result was that his proficiency grew by leaps and bounds. At the outset of the tours with Cassignol, Cochran was almost as much a spectator as any of the many who saw the matches. Later he became a contender even against the skill of the French expert.

Since the death of Cassignol, Cochran has had little opportunity to match his strength against a man of equal worth. Hoppe, whatever may have been the influencing reason, could not be induced to sign for a contest and the other players of note were not in this section of the country.

It was only recently that Schaefer and Yamada, who had been playing in a San Francisco academy, decided to come East. On the way they have played several exhibition matches and now are ready to tackle Cochran, who was the real objective all along. While New Yorkers have come to consider Cochran almost invincible the men who will play him are not awed by the reports of high runs and high averages. Both Yamada and Schaefer can point with pride to performances which appear to match those of Cochran.

Players Have High Averages.

Taking the full list of their exhibitions since leaving the coast as the basis of estimate it appears that both Yamada and Schaefer have made a grand average of somewhere in the neighborhood of 30. Schaefer has averaged as high as 50 for an 800-point match, this having been established in Seattle, where he also succeeded in making a high run of 283. One 300-point game he closed out in just three innings for an average of 100.

Yamada, from the land of Nippon, averaged nearly 60 in a 600-point exhibition match at Medford, Oregon. It was there also that he made a high run of 201. Yamada has more than once proved himself a master with the cue, and there is no reason to expect less of him than in the past, when on one occasion he defeated Hoppe. For a time several years ago Yamada toured the country with Hoppe. It will therefore be seen that he has the tournament experience and the ability to make him a hard man to defeat. He is a skillful close-nurse player, and always interesting, whether he is winning or losing.

Schaefer has yet to prove his skill in competition here. The son of the great Wizard Schaefer has shown now and then flashes of the skill which it might be expected that he would inherit, but his New York performances have been tinged with a lack of finish that was fatal, especially when there was also lack of consistency.

In a tournament several years ago at the Hotel Astor, one of the last professional championships played in the city, by the way, Schaefer was something of a disappointment. He had a good stroke and his work was artistic at times, but it was also temperamental, and Schaefer did not hold up well with the big men he was called upon to face. Since then he is said to have improved greatly. He was very much of a youngster then; now, with more mature years, play of a greater solidarity can be expected. His averages and runs made in the West show that he has arrived. His real tournament test is to be made against Cochran; in fact, it will be a test for each.

NEW GOLF LEADER INHERITS BIG JOB

F. S. Wheeler Looked Upon as Proper President for U. S. G. A. During Wartime.

ARRANGE RED CROSS EVENTS

Every Section of Country Expected to be Involved in Raising Relief Funds.

Shouldering the responsibility of carrying the business and political side of golf throughout a war year, Frederick B. Wheeler of Apawamis, the new President of the United States Golf Association, has taken active hold of a job of big proportions. Although the U. S. G. A. will not attempt any championships until the war is over, there are any number of questions of overwhelming difficulty facing every golf community and needing the executive attention of the President of the national golf body.

Mr. Wheeler inherits a Presidential situation such as no leader of the U. S. G. A. has been called upon to face. However, associates of Mr. Wheeler are exceedingly confident that golf is most fortunate to have such an executive at this time. For years a leader in the big business world as President of the American Can Company and a patriotic supporter of the Government before and since the war, Mr. Wheeler is looked upon as the one man in golf to carry the national association safely through the troubles of the war.

The new President, the first to come from the metropolitan district in several years, is an ardent player of the game, as well as a firm believer in golf as a premier conditioner of men and women. Mr. Wheeler has been identified with golf as a player almost from the inception of the game in this country at St. Andrew's in the early 90s. While never attaining championship ability, he is a consistent eighty man and proved this conclusively only a few weeks ago by winning the Palm Beach championship from a field of strong contenders.

Mr. Wheeler has been on the Executive Board of the U. S. G. A for several years, as Treasurer of the national body, and is well versed in the workings of the organization. He has gone through the fights of the different cliques which have sprung up year after year, and he always has been a firm believer in the association over and above everything else. That he still holds the organization over and above everything else is his own assertion, and golf should benefit thereby.

Advocates District Tourneys.

It was Mr. Wheeler who advocated district tournaments for the different associations of the country during the war, while at the same time putting the stamp of disapproval on national fixtures. He insisted at the annual meeting of the U. S. G. A., at which he ascended to office, that competitive golf should be fostered and developed steadily, if only to keep the men and women of the country in condition for war calls if nothing else. He declared that it was his own personal observation that golf keeps the mind and body healthy, an attribute now insisted upon by every war governing board.

Mainly through the pleading of Mr. Wheeler the different sectional associations of the country have planned to renew golf competitions. Even the Metropolitan Association, which last year completely frowned upon any sort of golf gathering, now is ready to sanction club tournaments. It is practically assured that the metropolitan district tournament season, which opens at Lakewood during the last week of this month, will be one round of tournaments until Lakewood officially closes the season next Thanksgiving Day.

In deciding against the national fixtures during the period of the war Mr. Wheeler asserted that it was unfair to those who are in war service, unfair to the governmental control of the war, and unfair to the nation at large to hold any big golf fixtures which might tend to take precedence over anything which would help to promote the war. In the same breath he exhibited that he was no wild fanatic by urging sectional, city, and club events.

One of the chief problems confronting Mr. Wheeler is to map out a campaign for Red Cross and war relief exhibitions throughout the country. It is possible that the U. S. G. A. will foster another such national tournament as was held July 4 last, when more than $60,000 was raised for a fund which went to purchase ambulances. Some of the officials already are making plans for such an event, and confidently believe that twice the amount raised last year will be achieved this time.

Mrs. William A. Gavin, women's national golf champion, has signified her willingness to play exhibition matches for the benefit of war relief funds during the Summer. She has offered her services not only to the Red Cross but to the U. S. G. A. A series of matches in which Mrs. Gavin was pitted against any one of the leading amateurs of professionals in a handicap affair, such as she played against Jerome D. Travers last Fall, should attract a big gate.

West Makes Big Plans.

Recently the Western Golf Association completed plans for a series of exhibitions to be held throughout the Summer in which all of the leading lights of the big Middle Western body were to take part. Chick Evans of Edgewater, the present amateur and open champion of the country, again has offered his services to be used as the association sees fit. Evans last year helped materially to raise more than $50,000, and Western officials believe that with cooperation of all interested it will be possible to raise $1,000,000 this year.

A match between Evans and Mrs. Gavin played either in New York or in Chicago would be a national attraction which would draw a record gallery. The national champion appears more than apathetic whenever it is suggested that he play in New York, but he probably could be prevailed upon to stretch a point if such a match were arranged. It is certain that Mrs. Gavin would accept a handicap match, in which she received nine strokes from the champion, and would go to Chicago for eighteen or thirty-six holes of the affair. A match in which thirty-six holes were played in Chicago, probably eighteen holes over two courses, and the same amount over two New York courses would be a convincing argument for the Red Cross. It further might bring to a conclusion that much mooted question as to the golf supremacy of the male over the so-called weaker sex. Jerry Travers could not prove that the masculine player had anything on the feminine. Probably Evans could.

The plan of the Western Association in its season of exhibition matches calls for a series of contests over the courses of clubs which will gurantee the collection of a fund sufficient to defray the expenses and leave a balance for the local chapter of the Red Cross. One offer of $5,000 was made by the Hillcrest Club of Kansas City for a July 4 exhibition.

Among the players who have volunteered their services are Chick Evans, Warren K. Wood, a former Western champion; Bobby Jones, Southern champion; Perry Adair, Jones's running mate from Atlanta; Kenneth P. Edwards, runner-up to Francis Ouimet in the Western championship last season; Miss Alexa Stirling, women's national champion; Miss Elaine V. Rosenthal, former women's Western champion, and these professionals: Jock Hutchinson, James Barnes, Walter Hagen, Bob MacDonald, Gil Nicholls, George Sargent, and George Simpson.

These players are to make trips about the country, playing together in matches at different clubs. They are to be booked on a regular schedule, and those clubs wishing to secure the talent for a one-day show for the Red Cross need only to write to Craft W. Higgins, Secretary of the Western Golf Association, guarantee a suitable purse, and get a date. It will be a sort of a golf circus, without a band.

In a letter written from France, Philip Carter, former North and South amateur champion, sent word to his father, Colin S. Carter, an eminent senior, that a soldier's life in France is desirable just now. Young Carter tells of being near the front line, and also tells of enjoyable visits he has had to spots of France still unsullied by the Germans.

GLOOM IN TIGER CAMP.

Departure of Savage Deprives Nine of Veteran Moundsman.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 6.—Princeton's baseball prospects became a shade more gloomy this week when Ernest Savage, 'Varsity pitcher, left college to enlist. Savage was the only experienced moundsman available, and his loss has left the Tigers in a rather bad predicament, as regards pitchers. Captain Bade, who held down third base in the few games that the Tigers played last Spring, has been undergoing instruction in pitching under Coach Fred Dawson, and it seems probable that he will be used in the box in most of the eight games that Princeton is scheduled to play.

Kirkland, who possesses a little natural ability but lacks experience, reported this week, and appears the most likely man of the other candidates who are trying for the position. Gibboney, Matlock, and Moore, who is also a candidate for first base, are the other candidates.

It is now probable that Princeton will use Whitman as backstop and shift Morey Trimble, the versatile Tiger athlete, to the outfield. Whitman has shown improvement over his work of last year and seems just about as good as Trimble, who always played in the outfield previous to this.

For the first time this season Coach Dawson was able to assemble all his men at the same time last Monday, and since then daily workouts have been held. Madden, who is considered the likely man for second base, has not yet reported, but all of the other candidates are now out. Horne is likely to play at first base, and Bauhan at shortstop. Captain Bade is used as a pitcher Cook or Raleigh will probably be put at his position. Trimble will be used in left field and Thompson will probably be used in centre. Either Winn or Reed will play right field.

Princeton's season opens next Saturday with the Camp Dix team. A game which was scheduled for today with a nine picked from the men who are training for commissions at Camp Dix had to be cancelled because most of the players were placed under quarantine, and the Tigers held a practice game with the Freshmen.

BASEBALL RIVALS TO MEET.

Columbia and Fordham Ready for First Diamond Battle.

Columbia and Fordham, local baseball rivals for many years, will meet Wednesday in the opening fray of their two-game series. The contest will start the home campaign on Fordham Field. The two teams will meet again on April 27 at South Field.

Although their ranks were shattered by enlistments, both colleges have shown every indication of being represented by fast nines. Columbia has defeated several teams in convincing fashion, and Fordham has also shown power in the games played thus far.

Andy Coakley has built up a strong offensive combination, and a fast infield is provided with the veterans Hauck and Buonaguro again on the job at third base and shortstop. Farrell and Koenig are dependable boxmen.

CORNELL BASEBALL TEAM IS SELECTED

Coach Sharpe Practically Decides Upon 'Varsity Nine for Season's Play.

ITHACA, N. Y., April 6.—Now that the Cornell baseball squad has begun practice on Percy Field the business of selecting a nine for the opening game with Lafayette next Saturday is well under way. Although a few changes may be made Coach Al Sharpe has about made up his mind as to the makeup of the 'Varsity team.

Coach Sharpe has reduced the squad to the following men: Pitchers, Brookmire, Needle, Malcolm, Scutt, Rees, Holbrook, and Stockett; catchers, J. Minier, Crocco, Kraus, and Winsor; infielders, Ensworth, Lailey, Murphy, Bonagura, Howard, Stewart, Kendall, Dragat, Pierson, Harden, and Florsheim, and outfielders, Wagner, Cross, Corwin, Muller, G. Minier, and Rackow. There is no training table, but the men are expected to observe the usual rules.

Brookmire, Malcolm, and Needle are the leading pitchers, and unless others develop these three will do most of the work. J. Minier is slated for catcher, his arm being the best of the several candidates. Ensworth, who played on the freshman team two years ago, is holding down first base, while Kendall, the basket ball Captain, who has shown considerable hitting ability, will play second. Howard is to play short and Bonagura third. The former is the only 'Varsity man on the job.

Dr. Sharpe hopes to have six outfielders, using them accordingly as the opposing team employs left or right handed pitchers. The men who will play in the outer garden are Wagner, Corwin, Muller, Stewart, Lailey, Murphy, and possibly Harden and Cross.

The election this week of H. I. Howard, the shortstop, to be Acting Captain of the 'Varsity team, has been well received in undergraduate circles. Howard was a practically unanimous choice.

Discussion of the future of Cornell's athletic program has been in progress for some time, and it has been decided to go ahead with the sports next year, though on a restricted basis because of financial problems. Income from athletics has been materially reduced, and the association can hardly come through the year without a deficit.

On account of the pressure of military duties, it has been necessary to abandon the weekly program of track meets on Saturdays until the middle of April, when the freshmen and sophomores will be free again. Track training now is in progress on Schoellkopf Field, and the immediate goal is the Pennsylvania relay carnival.

COLUMBIA ACTIVE ON TRACK.

Several Promising Distance Men Training Under Metcalf.

T. Nelson Metcalf, track coach at Columbia, after looking over the 'Varsity material which has been working on the South Field for several days, said he believed the team's greatest strength would be over the long distances. None of last year's sprinters are in college, but for the half-mile, the mile, and the two-mile runs Columbia will have several veterans.

The track season will open April 12, with an interclass meeting. The other events on the Spring calendar follow:

April 18, handicap meet; April 26 and 27, Penn relays; May 1, Freshman-Sophomore meet; May 4, Princeton at Princeton; May 11, Brown at Providence.

VOSHELL RETAINS INDOOR NET TITLE

Champion Successfully Defends Tennis Honors Against Alexander.

SHAFER AND SMITH WIN

Conquer Tilden and Donaldson, 7-5, 6-1, 6-4, in Doubles Championship.

By dint of much perseverance and a high degree of skill, S. Howard Voshell yesterday won for the second time the national indoor tennis championship in singles on the courts of the 7th Regiment Armory. Defending his laurels against the aggression of Frederick B. Alexander in the final round of the event, Voshell succeeded in gaining the coveted victory in straight sets with the score 7—5, 6—2, 8—6. In the doubles final crown was bestowed on G. Carlton Shafer and King Smith, this pair defeating William T. Tilden, 2d, of Philadelphia and Cecil Donaldson, the 15-year-old Brooklyn boy at 7—5, 6—1, 6—4.

It has ever been the case that the singles final attracted the greatest attention, and there was no exception this year with two of the most proficient players hereabouts competing for the title. It will always be regretted that Alexander was not in the best of condition for the match. A sprained ankle which he suffered earlier in the tournament placed him under a handicap that nullified in a marked degree the exercise of his remarkable skill on the courts.

Even with this disadvantage the contest was keenly waged by the former internationalist, and Voshell was pressed to supply the best quality of tennis which he can comand to earn the decision. It was rather remarkable in a way that Voshell could ascent to such tennis heights as he did. Having been in training for the aviation branch of the service during the Winter at Princeton, he has had little opportunity to round out his tennis play to the formidable quality which it attained during the last two years. Yet even without practice Voshell proved himself a player of wonderful resource and powerful strokes. All through the tournament he has been playing in fine form, but he reserved his best day on the courts for the time when he was to meet Alexander.

Voshell Is Careful.

Yesterday Voshell played a game that could not help but excite admiration. He did not hurry things, being content to play each stroke carefully, while at the same time imparting a sting to it that made it difficult to reutrn. There was not the least bit of impetuosity in his work on the court. He measured things quickly and carefully, realizing that he could not afford to take chances against a player of Alexander's calibre.

More than any other stroke that he possessed, Voshell's service was his forte. He sent his swiftly propelled first ball true on many occasions, and the twisting break of his second service made that almost as difficult to handle. The inability of Alexander to exercise his customary agility perhaps emphasized the effect of Voshell's service, but it would have been puzzling even had Alexander been in the best of condition to strive for the returns. One feature was that Voshell had almost perfect control over the ball, sending it where he would apparently, but most of the time he played to Alexander's backhand, having discovered a weakness in this direction. Alexander could not shift his position quickly, and he was on a number of occasions the victim of a service ace.

The title holder played just the type of game to upset Alexander's finely developed defense. He followed his service to the net with amazing speed, and once at the barrier, volleyed and smashed with precision. Alexander's hard drives went back across the net to cause him frequent confusion, and some of the sharply cut off shots raced away completely. In the first and third sets, as the score indicates, there was very little to chose between the men.

In the last set particularly, Alexander several times became threatening, but Voshell managed to hold him off in the rallies and pull out of several embarressing positions. Although the scores were close, it was always manifest that Alexander could not bring his greatest effectiveness to bear, and, therefore, Voshell had the appearance of being a winner from early in the first set, it being too much to expect that he could stand off the determined attack on the part of Voshell by his strategy.

Placements Are Frequent.

The first set was remarkable, in that placements cut such a large figure in the outcome. Neither contestant was prone to make errors, and there was a spirited duel with dazzling shots that aroused frequent applause. During the first four games each player proved himself invincible when serving. Three of the games were taken at love, and in the fourth only a single point was scored against the victor. Two double faults almost caused Voshell's overthrow in the fifth game, but he succeeded in pulling it out to his credit, and then followed by smashing his way through Alexander's service by sizzling passing shots down the lines, which were always a puzzle to Alexander when they came on his backhand. He could not recover himself quickly enough to make the returns.

In the next game, the seventh, Voshell fell into a sea of errors, some of them of his own making and some the result of the excellent placement work on the part of Alexander, with the result that the latter broke through. The ninth game was a spirited deuce encounter, which Alexander won at 7—5 on points. How well the men were playing is indicated by the fact that of the twelve points scored in this game, no less than eight were placements, and the others were outs, the result of attempting to cut the lines too closely. Service continued to account for the games until the twelfth was reached. Voshell here made a determined effort to break through, and two nicely placed shots and an out by Alexander gave him a lead at 40—0. The winning point Alexander himself contributed when he double faited, a rather inglorious ending for a sternly fought set.

The champion moved along at a rapid pace in the second set. The first five games followed service, and then Alexander was broken through, mainly because of his own errors. Voshell carried off the next game, a deuce encounter, on his own service, and again broke through Alexander for the winning points. It appeared that Alexander was weakening in this set, and the start of the third set seemed to give confirmation of the suspicion. Voshell won his own service and immediately broke through Alexander's.

He began to see the championship again within his grasp, and hurried his play a bit. He opened the third game with a double fault, which perhaps disconcerted him somewhat; at any rate, his court was a vulnerable mark for Alexander, who rallied his game superbly, and upset Voshell's aspirations for the time being. He played carefully, and the lost opportunity never again presented itself to Voshell until the match had been carried to the fourteenth game, when he broke through against the weakening play of Alexander. Before this, however, Voshell had himself been several times in danger. Once Alexander led Voshell on the latter's service by 40—0, but the title holder succeeded in winning the game by the most strenuous kind of work.

The effort was beginning to make itself manifest in the twelfth game, when Alexander was pressed to the longest game of the match to establish his own service. In the following game he pressed forward rapidly on Alexander's errors and won when he broke through in the fourteenth game.

Tilden Brilliant in Flashes.

Shafer and Smith played a well-balanced game of doubles that was more than the team of Tilden and Donaldson could match. Tilden was brilliant at times, but he was also weak on other occasions, and his service, usually a feature of pronounced strength in his play, suffered before the excellent defensive work of the rival pair. Donaldson was hardly as good as in some of his earlier matches and Tilden felt called upon to back his younger partner on many occasions. Whether this was wise or not is a question. It seemed probable that Donaldson, left to his own devices, would have made some of the shots which Tilden failed to negotiate.

Smith and Shafer forced the net on all occasions, and there volleyed and smashed in a determined manner. During the first set Tilden and Donaldson interposed something like an adequate defense, but in the succeeding sets Smith and Cragin were even stronger, and blazed their way through to victory.

ROBESON WINS GOLF TITLE.

Is 1 Up on Stranahan in North and South Championship.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 6.—I. S. Robeson of the Oakhill Country Club, Rochester, won the North and South amateur championship title at Pinehurst today, defeating R. A. Stranahan of the Inverness Golf Club, Toledo, by the narrow margin of 1 up at the end of the 36 hole final contest.

Both players showed the effects of the strain of the long six-day tournament. Robeson hooked into the woods several times on his drives, and Stranahan showed a predilection for driving into the traps, and missed two short putts, which probably cost him the championship.

In spite of a poor hole here and there, both players managed to finish the first 18 holes in 39, 41—80. The first 9 holes of the second round were the most expensive of the fray, each taking 43 to the turn, Robeson coming home in 40 for an 83, while Stranahan finished the second round in 84.

The first round found the players all even at the turn, and again all even going to the eighteenth, each having won two holes on the way in. It was on the eighteenth that Stranahan allowed himself the first of his two fatal misses of short putts, failing to go down for a half from a distance of less than a yard, and leaving Robeson 1 up at the end of the round.

Stranahan caught up with Robeson in the first half of the second round and made himself 1 up at the tenth, and 2 up at the twelfth, but fell back to 1 up when Robeson sank a long putt for a birdie on the fourteenth, and Stranahan again missed a miniature putt for a half. Robeson squared the match at the sixteenth, won the seventeenth with a 3, which made him 1 up, and took the contest and the title when he and Stranahan both went down in five on the home green.

WESLEYAN'S ERRORS GIVE YALE VICTORY

Elis Presented with Opening Baseball Game by Score of 6 to 5.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 6.—Yale barely outscored Wesleyan, 6 to 5, today in the first baseball game played on Yale Field since June, 1916. The visitors outhit the home nine, but ragged fielding and failure to watch Yale base runners cost them victory.

Yale was presented with the game in the seventh inning, when three runs were scored without a hit. Yale scored two runs in the third inning on singles by Gordon and Gage and Tomlinson's error. In the sixth Lyman was passed and made the circuit on singles by Holmes and Parker. Holmes was caught off second by the hidden ball trick. Lynch was safe on Tomlinson's error in the seventh, Gage followed on Foster's misplay, both scoring on Raine's muff of Boyd's fly, and Boyd scored on Foster's second misplay of the inning.

NAVY NINE DEFEATS FORDHAM BY 5 TO 3

Bronx Collegians Left Behind When Blakeslee Hits Home Run with Two on Base.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 6.—Hitting more timely and playing in somewhat snappier form than in the opening contest of the season with Holy Cross Wednesday, the Annapolis Midshipmen this afternoon triumphed over Fordham College of New York by 5 to 3.

A long drive to deep centre by Blakeslee, Navy, with two men on, in the third inning, stood out as the feature of the game, and besides it gave the middies enough tallies to win, as they registered one count in the opening frame.

In spite of the fact that each of the teams was charged with miscues, the game was well played, the fielding at times being fast and sharp. The pitching honors between Gates and McQuaid were about even, the Navy gathering six hits to their opponents seven, and the timely swat of Blakeslee, as before referred to, was largely responsible for winning the game.

It looked as though the New Yorkers would pull up and possibly win in the eighth session when they filled the bases after Galligan hit safely, but Colettie, who tried to score from third, was caught at the plate.

WEST POINT YIELDS TO BOSTON COLLEGE

Murrill Battered Hard in First Two Innings and Army Nine Loses, 6 to 2.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, April 6.—The Army suffered its first defeat of the season today when Boston College won, 6 to 2. Murrill, who has been pitching in midseason form until today, got away to a bad start, and when he was taken out of the box, with nobody down, in the second inning, the visiting collegians had already secured all their tallies, which proved to be enough and to spare. The Army's tall pitcher had allowed four safe drives, one of them a double; walked three men, and pitched one wild one.

One of the free passes forced a run across the plate. With that Hans Lobert, the Army's new coach, derricked the Virginian, and Jones took up the burden for the soldiers. Jones pitched good ball, but the Army was unable to hit Fitzpatrick, the collegians' southpaw twirler, effectively.

The cadets scored in the second on Davis's triple and Wicks's single to right. In the sixth Oliphant beat out a grasser and took second when the throw got by Enright. When Foster drilled one through short the Army Captain moved up. Foster drew a throw from Wilson a moment later, and Ollie went home.

The cadets threatened several times, notably in the seventh and ninth, but fast fielding cut them down. Oliphant's fielding in left was a feature.

BLUNDERS COSTLY TO ST. JOHN'S NINE

Stevens Earns 2 to 0 Victory, Due Mainly to Misplays of Rival Ball Players.

Stevens opened its baseball season yesterday afternoon at Castle Field, Hoboken, with a 2-0 victory over St. John's College of Brooklyn.

The game resolved itself into a pitchers' battle between Carlson of Stevens and Waters, St. John's southpaw, the former getting a shade the better of it at the start, when his team mates scored two runs as a result of errors on the part of the St. John's infield.

After the first inning Waters kept Stevens at his mercy except in the eighth, when more errors again put him in a hole. However, he worked his way out safely. With the bases full and none out he retired the side on an easy pop fly and an infield out.

Stevens scored its only runs in the first inning on a base on balls, two errors and a single.

With his two-run lead, Carlson, whose chief asset was great speed, managed to keep the visitors away from scores. St. John's had men on the bases in seven out of the nine innings, but the exceptional fielding ability of the Stevens men, who corralled long drives time after time, prevented any scoring.

The Brooklynites threatened to tie up the count in the third, when Pitcher Waters drove the ball to deep centre for two bases, the only extra-base hit of the game. Waters stole third, but was unable to get any further before Carlson retired his team mates.

Eggers was the heaviest hitter of the day, getting two of the well-scattered singles off Waters.

NAVY VICTOR AT LACROSSE.

Defeats Swarthmore in Spirited Contest at 2 to 0.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 6.—The midshipmen won at lacrosse here this afternoon from Swarthmore by 2 to 0. Both teams showed up well in stick work for so early in the season, and it was a spirited contest throughout; with the navy lads showing a little the better in speed and stamina.

Nearly half of the second period had gone when Derringer ran the ball down the field cleverly and dipped to Wisenbacher, who shot a goal. Five minutes later Gersing, by some clever dodging, got within striking distance and shot the ball in the net. Some of the best work for the navy was done by Martin and Derringer.

YALE TO PLAY LACROSSE.

Three Games Arranged for Eli Team, Only One at Home.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 6.—Three games have been scheduled for the university lacrosse team for the present term. The first game, which is the only one to be played at New Haven, is arranged for April 20 with the Stevens Institute of Technology of Hoboken. On the following week the team will play Swarthmore at Swarthmore, and on May 4 Lehigh will be met at South Bethlehem, Penn. The date of May 11 is still open, and a fourth game may be added to the schedule on that day.

More candidates are being sought for the lacrosse team. Many of the former players of lacrosse have left college and also have left a bundle of vacancies which have not yet been filled. Practice is held only three times a week.

STEVENS WINS AT LACROSSE

Dobler Decides Extra-Period Game with New York Team.

An extra ten-minute period was necessary to decide the lacrosse match between Stevens Tech and the twelve of the Lacrosse Club of New York yesterday at Hoboken, Stevens winning, 2 to 1.

Dobler scored both of Stevens goals, the first coming after ten minutes of play in the first period. Brisatti tied things up for the New Yorkers at the start of the second half.

Dobler netted the winning shot in the extra period, making a clever throw after a series of brilliant dodges and runs.

Golf Trophy for Mrs. Splain.

Special to The New York Times.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 6.—Mrs. J. G. Splain of Detroit won the Silver Foils handicap contest against bogey at Pinehurst today, finishing 4 up, with the assistance of a handicap of 16. Mrs. Ronald H. Barlow of Philadelphia tied for second prize with Miss Sara Fownes of Pittsburgh and Mrs. Spencer Waters of Apawamis.

TRACK COACH FOR N. Y. U.

Von Elling Will Direct the Athletes This Spring.

At a recent meeting of the New York University Athletic Association it was decided to intensify the present training of the track team by obtaining a professional coach. In compliance with this action, Dr. Frank H. Cann announced yesterday that E. H. Von Elling had been engaged to coach the Violet's track squad. Von Elling, who is at present with the Mohawk Athletic Club, coached the men on the heights during the seasons of 1915 and 1916, and in the latter year N. Y. U. won the Middle Atlantic States intercollegiate championship.

The absence of Howard Cann, who is now an Ensign on the superdreadnought New Mexico, and also of "Bobby" Broome, who is now on overseas duty in the Naval Reserve, will be keenly felt this season. Cann, who was a high scorer in all the field events, holds the Middle States shot put record, with a distance of 45 feet 3 inches.

The prospects, on the whole, are exceptionally good, considering the small nucleus of veterans—Harold Finley, the Middle States quarter-mile champion; Stinson, also a quarter-miler, and Seiffert, a high jumper.

The Spring schedule is as follows:

April 27, intercollegiate relay races, Pennsylvania relay carnival, at Philadelphia; May 4, dual meet, Rutgers at New Brunswick; May 11, dual meet, Stevens at home; May 18, annual Middle Atlantic States intercollegiate meet at Easton, Penn.

MINEOLA LOSES ITS RACES.

Fair and Harness Events to be Held at Brooklyn Track.

By taking over the Mineola Fair Grounds for a base hospital the War Department has made it necessary to declare off the Mineola Fair, with the horse show and trotting meeting always held in connection with the fair, and has forced the Nassau Driving Club to find a new track for its amateur harness racing matinees, as well as for the annual intercity trotting meeting of the Junior League of Amateur Driving Clubs on July 15-18.

That the Nassau matinees and the league meeting will all be transferred to the Parkway Driving Club's track in Brooklyn was made known yesterday, when negotiations to this end were begun by L. W. Boynton, President of the Nassau Driving Club, and Captain W. M. Halsted, President of the Parkway Driving Club.

Captain Halsted announced that all trotting races which closed on April 1 had filled well for the Metropolitan Circuit meeting to be held at the Parkway track on July 23-25 in aid of needy families of enlisted men who have gone to the front with Brooklyn regiments. In six events, each for a purse of $1,000, 112 horses were entered, making an average of eighteen to a race. Though the number of nominations in the races for trotters exceeded expectations, the three races for pacers failed to fill. Other events are to be opened later as substitutes for the unpopular pacing stakes.

YALE FIRST CREW CHOSEN.

Robinson and Patterson Only Oarsmen Uncertain of Seats.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 6.—Professor Mather Abbott, Yale's rowing coach, today selected the 'Varsity eight which, with two exceptions, is practically certain to be seated in the Eli shell in its opening races of the season. Although the races which will be rowed with Harvard on June 1, between the first and second 'Varsity and the freshman eights, are the only rowing events certain for Yale this year, correspondence is in progress with Pennsylvania, Princeton, Cornell, and Columbia, and it is practically certain that a couple of events will take place on the Housatonic on May 11 and 25.

The 'Varsity eight as selected today by Professor Abbott, is seated as follows: Stroke, A. R. Hyatt, Captain; No. 7, D. T. Vail; No. 6, J. B. Knox; No. 5, H. B. Price; No. 4, T. Robinson; No 3, W. Mead; No. 2, M. Patterson; bow, B. Weir and coxswain, J. F. Knott.

The two unsettled positions are No. 2 and No. 5. L. C. Adams seemed easily in the lead for No. 5, until the Easter vacation began, when he was compelled to leave college for a cruise with the Yale naval unit. In his absence Price has rapidly developed, and when the crew was reorganized Price had the seat tentatively. If his present form continues he will be a fixture. In that event Adams may get a trial at No. 4.

Four evenly matched oarsmen are being tried at No. 2, Patterson, W. L. Austin, J. McHenry, and E. F. Campbell. Patterson is slightly in the lead for the position, but no selection will be made for a couple of weeks.

Three veterans are rowing on the eight in Captain Hyatt, Vail, and Mead. Hyatt and Vail were seated at stroke and No. 7 in the eight which last year easily defeated the Pennsylvania oarsmen at Philadelphia. Both are finished oarsmen and are driving the crew at a high clip. Mead, who is at No. 3, is probably the strongest oarsman in the boat from a physical standpoint. Knox, No. 6, although not a finished oarsman, is at present one of the smoothest oarsmen in the shell. Weir rowed on his freshman crew and has had two seasons of competition.

Only three freshman eights have been formed, because of the small number of candidates. As many as ten freshman crews have been organized annually for the last thirty years.

MANHATTAN NINE VICTOR.

Brooklyn Cathedral Team Beaten by 6 to 0 Score.

Baseball teams of Cathedral College of Manhattan and Cathedral College of Brooklyn met yesterday at Prospect Park, Brooklyn, and the Manhattan contingent won by 6 to 0. Boyle, the Manhattan pitcher, kept the Brooklynites hitless for four innings. Two safeties were collected from his delivery in the fifth and another in the sixth inning, and this was the extent of the Brooklyn hitting. The Manhattan collegians broke the ice with a run in the fifth inning, and in the eighth clinched the victory with five tallies.

The score by innings:

Columbia 'Varsity Has Workout on Hudson River.

The Columbia 'Varsity crew had its first row in the shell yesterday afternoon, when Coach Rice took the men for a spin of several miles up and down the Hudson River course at Edgewater. It was the first time that some of the men had pulled an oar in a Blue and White 'Varsity shell. They were seated as they have been placed for some time now, with Steinschneider at bow, Hawkins at No. 2, Kraus at No. 3, Schachtel at No. 4, Parks at No. 5, Taylor at No. 6, Worinser at No. 7, and Brown at stroke.

Coach Rice seemed optimistic because, beginning tomorrow, he will have the use of Gallico, one of last year's crewsters, who has been kept away from the boat by an injury to his wrist.

HOLY CROSS BANGS COLUMBIA'S BOXMEN

Blue and White Nine Proves an Easy Victim, Losing by 10 to 1.

PURPLE BATTERS BUSY

Visitors' Launch a Heavy Attack Against Three of Coach Coakley's Twirlers.

Columbia sent three pitchers against the hard-hitting Holy Cross baseball nine, who came to South Field yesterday afternoon after a successful Southern trip, and not until Dutch Koenig, the southpaw, was sent by Coach Coakley to the box in the eighth to relieve Hauck did the heavy attack of the Purple cease. The Worcester boys got an easy victory at a 10 to 1 score.

Against the speed and control of Eddie Gill, Columbia could do nothing. Gill allowed only three hits, two of which combined in the first inning to give Columbia her lone tally, when Ackerman made the drive that scored Lester.

Farrell started well for Columbia, and had little trouble with even Holy Cross's formidable outfielders. The visitors got a run in the second, when Maloney scored on Frisch's wild throw of Gill's grounder. But in the fifth Farrell lost his control and walked Gill and Stutz on eight pitched balls. O'Neill, Holy Cross's heavy-hitting right fielder, drove the ball to the score board in left field for a home run, clearing the bases. Weinstein's throw to the plate to catch O'Neill was a fraction of a second too late.

Daly got a pass, and Farrell, still wild, hit Maloney on the arm. Daly was out at second on a fielder's choice of Bowen's grounder and scored on Donahue's two-bagger. Keating also got four balls, but Gill tapped lightly to Farrell, who caught him at first.

That was the end of Farrell, and in the sixth Coach Coakley took Hauck from third base and put him in the box. Another long drive to deep centre by O'Neill which, under the ground rules, went for a two-bagger, was turned into a run when Daly hit safely to centre. Buonaguro dropped Duffy's high fly, and Daly and Duffy scored on a hit to left field by Maloney.

Hauck remained in the box for the seventh. Keating started the inning with a drive which Carroll could not get. Gill got his first safety of the afternoon on a two-base slam to right. Stutz sacrificed Keating home, and Gill scored on Daly's double. Hauck played third base next inning.

Dutch Koenig allowed one hit in the two innings he worked, but the Columbia batsmen could not get to Gill, with the exception of Goodman, a substitute catcher, who took Clark's place when Koenig went to the mound, and who registered Columbia's third hit with a drive over shortstop in the eighth.

Before the game, which attracted two full stands, the Columbia Battalion held an exhibition drill on South Field.

CLINTON SWIMMERS IN VAN.

Defeat Townsend Harris Hall in Tank by 50 to 11.

Only one of the original three scholastic swimming meets scheduled in the second contests of the Public Schools Athletic League's junior high school indoor swimming tournament at City College materialized yesterday morning. In this the swimmers of De Witt Clinton High School trounced the Townsend Harris Hall High School representatives by the score of 50 to 11, making the second success for the West Fifty-ninth Street school's team in as many meets since the start of the tournament three weeks ago. Incidentally, it was by the same margin that they triumphed over the Erasmus Hall High School swimmers in their initial victory.

Yesterday's meet was the third thus far held, and it was by far the best. Two tournament records were smashed, and in the races close finishes ruled. To Samuel Kreisler of De Witt Clinton High School went the lion's share of individual glory. He captured two first places, in the diving contest for form and the 200-foot breast-stroke swim, and in the latter event created a new record for this novel scholastic swimming competition. Kreisler, in winning by about one yard from Silver, a teammate, in a thrilling finish, was clocked in 1:01. This eclipsed his own mark set two weeks ago by four-fifths of a second.

Another mark was established for the tournament in the 220-yard swim, which went to Palstein of Townsend Harris Hall. His time for the distance was 3:13 2-5, eclipsing the mark of two weeks ago credited to Wasser of Stuyvesant H. S., which was 4:11 4-5. This triumph, incidentally, was the only one of the day for the Townsend Harris Hall swimmers, and Palstein was forced hard to gain his victory by Latta of De Witt Clinton.

Bergman and Hordes, both representing the West Fifty-ninth Street school, furnished the large crowd of spectators with a brilliant duel in the 100-yard swim, which ended in Bergman emerging victorious by a touch at the finish. Bergman's time was 1:16.

In the other scheduled meets Manual Training H. S. defaulted to the High School of Commerce and Erasmus H. S. defaulted to Stuyvesant H. S.

The summaries:

HARLEM RIVER WIDENING.

Engineer Haffen Has New Plan to Eliminate Bend.

The Traffic and Waterways Bureau of the Bronx Board of Trade has under consideration, in addition to others affecting the waterways at other points, Consulting Engineer Louis F. Haffen's new plan for the solution of the problem of eliminating the bend in the Harlem River at Spuyten Duyvil, near the Johnson Iron Works.

The plan, as outlined by Mr. Haffen, follows:

"To begin at the entrance from the Hudson River, in the vicinity of Spuyten Duyvil, the elimination of the present bridge crossing of the New York Central Railroad, which is almost at water level, is absolutely necessary.

"This elimination can be accomplished by the substitution of a tunnel connection between the Bronx and Manhattan, underneath the stream, or, in lieu thereof, by some such method as is shown upon the plans of the proposed west side improvement, by a bridge of twenty-four-foot clearance at high water.

"The acute bend at the Johnson Foundry could be partially removed and thereby greatly facilitate navigation by the acquisition of 200 feet of the Johnson Foundry property in exchange for land under water owned by the Government, to the east and west thereof, saving not only considerable expense, but at the same time keeping the expenditure within the appropriation as provided for under the laws of 1916, and allowing at the same time of speedy action in securing results, as the destruction of the Johnson plant is out of the question at the present time.

"To the south of the present waterway, opposite the foundry, the northerly projection of Inwood Hill could be cut off the desired amount to allow of a large funnel shaped entrance to the ship canal of about 1,000 feet width, narrowing down to 600 feet at the bend and to 350 feet at the Marble Hill cut, which is the fixed width of the present ship canal."

Concerning the Highbridge piers, Mr. Haffen says in another report before the bureau for consideration:

"As to the obstruction to navigation of the piers of Highbridge, at West 170th Street, across the Harlem River, they should undoubtedly be removed and at once, and as the Harlem River is supposed to be a navigable stream and, therefore, under the jurisdiction of the National Government, a peremptory order should emanate from the United States authorities to remove said piers forthwith.

"This order would relieve the local authorities of a great deal of worry, to say the least, as it would prevent delay in the carrying out of the desired removal by persistent sentimentalists. Not only should these piers—probably three in number—be immediately taken out, but also all foundations of same, and the river channel dredged to a depth of at least twelve feet below extreme low water.

"This dredging to a depth of at least twelve feet below extreme low water should be general throughout the entire length of the Harlem River from the Hudson to the Kills, to allow of the full and unobstructed use of the channel of the Harlem for barge canal purposes."

Forest Hills Gardens

FIFTEEN MINUTES FROM PENN. STATION

Dignified in their substantial combination of rich, dark brick and stucco, three new detached houses of eight rooms and three baths have been completed for sale. Located on a quiet residential street, they have an unusual charm of appearance which makes them notable even in the Gardens. On account of the shortage of housing facilities rents have increased and will continue to rise. Any thoughtful person will realize that it is cheaper now to own a home that can be purchased on a small cash investment, paying the balance as rent. The supply of new houses is limited and the future cost of building will be excessive.

The environment is pleasanter than in Manhattan.
The floor space is cheaper than living in Manhattan.
The accessibility to the business, shopping and theatre districts is equal to living in Manhattan.
The frequency of electric trains, with a running schedule of fifteen minutes, discourages the idea of commuting.

DOINGS AND SAYINGS IN THE REAL ESTATE WORLD

REVIEW OF REAL ESTATE MARKET

Buyers Appear Interested in Both Residential and Business Properties.

COMMENT AND OPINION

Governor Signs Tax Lien Suspension Bill—Interesting Reflections of a Real Estate Operator.

Business last week was fairly well divided between commercial and residential properties. The several large transactions closed reflected the continued business expansion of the city along distinct lines. Among them were the purchase of 74 Broadway by the Central Trust Company; large plottage on East Thirty-sixth Street to be used for the building of an addition to B. Altman & Co.'s stable, and an east side block front on Avenue A, which eventually will be utilized for increased needs of the Eagle Pencil Company.

Among other transactions concerning themselves with commercial properties were deals involving the Beaver Street Arcade Building at 23 Beaver Street; the Taber Building at 78 Wall Street taken for a long term by the Pacific Development Company, and also the Havemeyer Sugar House property in Greenpoint, Brooklyn, which was purchased by the Greenpoint Improvement Company. The demand for residential holdings continued substantially along old lines, trading concerning itself with both dwellings and apartment houses in various parts of the city.

Hopeful Dwelling Outlook.

In view of the anticipated increase in rents of apartments, there is a growing belief that the private house market will be materially strengthened. Shortage of apartment space, coupled with advanced rents, may stimulate a revival of interest in the private house, which in more than one section of the city, within recent years, has become a drug on the market and has held little interest either from the selling or renting standpoints.

No Tax Lien Sales for Three Years.

Senator Sheridan's Tax Lien bill, preventing the sale of real estate for nonpayment of taxes for a period of three years, has been signd by the Governor, and is now a law.

Its enactment suspends the initiation of tax sale proceedings against delinquent owners for three years and is designed to protect small owners who have been experiencing financial difficulties since the beginning of the war and who were in danger of losing their holdings at tax sales.

Real Estate Reflections.

Edgar A. Levy broke a lifelong after-dinner silence by making an address recently at the Park Avenue Hotel before members of the Pease & Elliman Club. He touched upon many phases of his career as real estate operator and builder in this city. The following excerpts are interesting:

"In regard to the co-operation between operator and broker, this is a field which has been fertile in antagonizing distrust and misunderstanding. A broker never quite believes that an operator can tell the truth. • • •

"There is also a pretty prevalent belief among brokers that we are attempting to deprive them of commissions rightly due them. I assure you that it is one of my difficult tasks to keep track of claims of rival brokers and to act equitably and justly to them, to keep free from entanglements and misunderstandings, and this not with the slightest idea of avoiding any payments I should make. That would be bad ethics but a worse business policy. • • •

"When a trade is proposed to me, one of the first things I consider is whether or not it is logical and advantageous from the other man's point of view, and whether he is going to improve his position by making the trade. I don't want to be a party to a trade where the only chance of a profit lies in the stinging of one of the parties. I don't want to sting anybody, and I assuredly don't want to be stung myself. There are plenty of opportunities to make a trade where both parties can be satisfied in the end, and I have not made a deal in the last seven or eight years where both parties have not been perfectly satisfied with their bargain.

"To my mind a business profession or calling to be successful in the long run must fulfill some useful and beneficial purpose to the community. I, personally, have found the most satisfaction and also the best monetary returns in those operations which have fulfilled this idea; it has not been by buying cheaply or driving sharp bargains. I have paid a fair value and sold the house at a reasonable figure. As I said before, I am rather proud of the fact that in all of the houses I have built and sold in the last ten years every purchaser is well satisfied with his purchase. I feel that the success of an operation is due to what I designate as the proper balance and functioning of all the elements that go to produce the house. • • •

"The building must be properly planned, that is, it must be the right kind of an apartment for the neighborhood, so that a want of the community is supplied. Then must come good, though substantial workmanship, not cheap and sloppy, nor extravagant and gaudy, but a sound building again meeting the proper demand of the community.

"As an example of the point I wish to bring out, let me take the old type of apartment house that was built some ten to fifteen years ago on the west side, especially on Central Park West and Riverside Drive. Poorly planned, poorly built, overloaded with ginger bread, carved limestone, fancy terra cotta, heavy and ugly trim over ornamental plaster, &c. External extravagance combined with poor structural workmanship.

"I should say in a 12-story apartment house covering a plot 100 by 100, comparing the cost of this old type house with the recent buildings on Park Avenue, that there has been a saving made of from $35,000 to $50,000 by the mere elimination of unessentials. This, of course, is figuring from a common standard of costs of labor and material. Now, this saving is made today in varying degrees in different operations. Most operations that have properly and intelligently applied this idea have been successful, and those that have not, that have been too wasteful or too close, have been unsuccessful to the degree and in proportion to their departure from this golden mean.

"So, by proper management and coordination and co-operation of all the different elements that go to produce a building, a success can be made. You can pay a profit to the owner of the land, a profit to good, competent contractors, full commission to the brokers, rent the apartment to tenants that are satisfied, and sell the building to a satisfied investor, and make an ample profit yourself, and, if I may add, a feeling of satisfaction in the job; whereas, on the other hand, there are plenty of operations where the man has bought the land cheap, made the broker divide his commission, used incompetent, cheap contractors, skimped the building in planning and construction, and in the end produced a house that he couldn't rent, couldn't sell for cost, and ended in failure and foreclosing. I don't think it is necessary to name to you particular instances of these two contrasting types. They are evident in every section of the city."

TAX LEGISLATION.

Recent Conference May Aid Passage of Bills.

As the result of a conference at Albany between members of the Legislature and representatives of the city administration and the Real Estate Board of New York, the prospect of securing important tax legislation affecting real estate appears to be considerably enhanced.

Senator Boylan's bill, Int. 621, which provides for a 17½-mill tax on realty, and a 2½-mill rate on personalty, was amended to make the real estate rate 20 mills, or $2 per hundred, and the personalty rate 11 mills, or $1.10 per hundred. In the latter case the change was made so as to avoid a conflict with the law taxing bank shares at 1 per cent., and providing that such bank shares shall not be taxed higher than other forms of personalty. The bill was also amended to provide that the portion relating to the realty tax should be effective Jan. 1, 1920, and that affecting personalty should go into effect at once. It was thought best to try out the personalty tax under this arrangement, to see what result it would bring in the way of taxes on personal estate. Amendments were also made so as to insure the continued exemptions now provided under Subdivisions 13, 14, 15, 16, and 21 of Section 4, Article 1., of Chapter 60 of the Consolidated Laws.

Senator Boylan has introduced a new bill, Int. 1,761, which amends the charter by requiring the owner or possessor of personal property in New York City to the value of $3,000 or more to file with the Department of Taxes and Assessments, during July of each year, a statement of such property. This plan is a variation of the Real Estate Board's suggestion, which was that the local Tax Department be given authority to make rules which would result in a listing of personal property.

STATE LAND RECORDS.

Controller Travis Suggests That an Inventory Be Made.

Just how much and what real estate the State of New York owns has never been accurately known, according to State Controller Travis, who recommends the taking of an inventory at once, and some central bureau established for recording all conveyances. In calling attention to this condition of the public records the Controller pointed out that information would be particularly important now, when it is proposed that the State engage in enterprises, such as water storage, in which the public lands will be constantly used.

"Investigations concerning State lands," explained the Controller, "disclose the fact that no lists of property held by the State are kept other than the record showing land acquired under tax sales or mortgages, or in forest-preserve counties by the Commissioners of the Land Board.

"These records are now on file in my office and preserved in two large safes. They include abstracts of titles and deeds for State hospital and armory sites, and land occupied by other various State institutions. Such lists, however, fail to show accurately the boundaries of the different parcels included in these deeds.

"From the earliest State history the sale of State lands has been in the hands of the various State officers for disposal, but with the exception of the scattering records of these sales filed in the Controller's office no copies were preserved of the deeds executed. Moreover, it was formerly the custom, when lands were acquired by the State, to have the title placed in the names of the various State institutions. Consequently, the deeds do not run to the people of the State, and in many instances, therefore, no record exists in any State office."

ADEQUATE TRAIN SERVICE.

Long Island Railroad Will Make Few Changes in Schedule.

The Long Island Railroad made the following announcement last week regarding its Summer train service:

"On account of war conditions, many persons have hesitated about renting houses on Long Island for the coming Summer, thinking that perhaps the train service would not meet their requirements.

"It is the intention of the Long Island Railroad Company to furnish the same adequate service during the coming season as heretofore, including the special Friday and Monday trains for the Hamptons.

"The number of buildings erected on Long Island during the year 1917 shows a decrease as compared with the number erected the previous year, which was due to increased cost of building materials and cost and scarcity of labor caused by war conditions. While the number of buildings erected last year shows a decrease, the number of commuters shows an increase. In 1916 there were 254,803 commutation tickets sold—in 1917 278,891. The record of buildings erected does not include the barracks and other buildings erected at the camps at Yaphank and Garden City."

Mayor Hylan Favors Tunnel.

At a meeting of the New Jersey Bridge and Tunnel Commission held at Trenton, N. J., Thursday, Commissioner Thomas N. McCarter reported regarding the conference the commission had with Mayor Hylan in New York as to the Jersey City-New York tunnel project.

He said Mayor Hylan had suggested that the New Jersey Commission send him all the reports it has bearing on the matter, including those of General Goethals, the New Jersey State Engineer. These data, the Mayor said, he would submit to the Board of Estimate, together with a recommendation that the Board name a sub-committee to confer with the New Jersey Commission and the New York Commission in an effort to push the tunnel project to a successful conclusion.

Joseph P. Day will usher in the Spring real estate market with a special sales day to be held next Thursday, April 11, in the Vesey Street Exchange Salesroom, included in which are suburban and country homes, together with investment properties in New York City.

HOW WILL FEDERAL ACQUISITION OF REAL ESTATE AFFECT LOCAL TAXATION?

Taking Over of Bush Terminal and Other Large Realty Holdings by the United States Government Raises Question as to Their Exemption from Tax Payments to City.

Recent large acquisitions of New York City real estate by the Government for use in connection with enlarged war activities, has raised an interesting question in city taxation. Since United States Government ownership of real estate automatically exempts that property from local taxation, acquisition of the fee in any of the large holdings taken over recently would remove these properties from the tax assessment rolls and cut off large income returns to the city.

It is known that the great Bush Terminal holdings in Brooklyn, assessed at many millions of dollars, have been taken over by the Government. Not long ago the office building at 45 Broadway, formerly the home of the Hamburg-American, was also acquired for Federal occupancy. This ten-story structure, occupying a plot 80.2 by 195, is assessed at $1,250,000. Other parcels of various sizes and values are also understood to have been acquired by the Government, so that the entire question begins to assume considerable importance.

Tax Department Concerned.

Jacob A. Cantor, President of the Board of Taxes and Assessment, who in his official capacity is vitally concerned in the entire matter, declared yesterday that Government control of real estate did not necessarily mean ownership, and expressed the hope that this temporary transfer of possession would not entail large losses in tax income to the city.

"The United States Government having taken over the Bush Terminal, the payment of taxes on the property became a matter of concern to the Department of Taxes and Assessments," said Mr. Cantor. "Since I alluded last Monday evening, at the meeting of the West End Association, to the matter of Governmental possession of these properties, and I presume to many others during the present emergency, I have been asked very often regarding the effect of this situation upon the collection of city taxes.

"It is of supreme importance just now, for the reason that real estate is heavily burdened under the present tax rate, and more so by reason of the fact that there is the probability of a heavy increase next year for various reasons which need not now be stated.

Possible Loss of $700,000 a Year.

"An examination of the Bush Terminal assessment shows that if the city was deprived of taxes from that property it would be a serious loss, approximating $700,000 per annum. I have been informed that the Navy Department and the War Department have practically divided the property between them, or at least most of it. As soon as I ascertained the fact that the Government was in possession I instituted inquiries in order to determine if any contract between the Government and the corporation had imposed any conditions with reference to the payment of taxes. I was informed by the attorneys acting for the corporation that no terms had been definitely agreed to. I realized that it would be important for the city to know the terms of the contract. I knew that under the Constitution of the United States, Article I., Section 8, Paragraph 17, that forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings of the United States would not be liable to either State or local taxation, as the property would come within the classification of instrumentalities of the Government necessary to the exercise of the power vested in it.

A Source of Litigation.

"It has been a source of much vexatious litigation throughout the United States as to what the instrumentalities of the Government are, so as to determine what the States can tax. For instance, some question arose as to the power of the State to tax the surplus capital of national banks in excess of the amount they are required by act of Congress to carry to their surplus fund semiannually. It has been followed by many of the States where the bank tax is levied that that is not a taxation of the means or agencies of the Federal Government but is a tax on the property of such agents—property not necessary to carry out any purpose of the Government in the execution of its constitutional powers.

"The right to tax such property has never been surrendered by the States. The limitation is as to the power of the State to tax agencies of the Federal Government, and it has been held that the agencies of the Federal Government are only exempted from State legislation so far as that legislation may interfere with or impair their effort in performing the functions to which they are designated to serve that Government. Any other rule will convert a principle founded alone in the necessity of securing to the Government of the United States the means of exercising its legislative power into an unauthorized and unjustifiable invasion of the rights of the States.

New Question Presented.

"I knew as a member of the Legislature that the United States Government could not acquire title to land within the State except by consent of the Legislature, but this proceeding on the part of the Federal Government by which it takes possession of property in this city temporarily for the present emergency presents an entirely different question. I am strongly of the opinion and conviction that this temporary use of city property for war purposes is a proper and necessary exercise of the power of the Federal Government and should be freely granted.

"I am informed that the Government is not disposed, at least at present, to acquire the title and ownership to this particular property or any property which it deems essential for the successful prosecution of the war, but at the same time I have no doubt that the ownership being retained as at present by a private individual or corporation, such property is liable to local taxation. This has relieved the administration greatly, as it must relieve the apprehension of all property owners in the city who may have anticipated the loss of taxes by reason of this temporary transfer of possession.

"I believe and have no doubt from information which reaches me that the Government will take a similar step with reference to other property within the city. It is however well to state that the Bush Terminal corporation expresses a perfect willingness to have this department informed of the proposed terms of any contract made between it and the Government."

Distributing Cost of War.

Leo Day Woodworth, Secretary of the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests, also discussed yesterday the relationship between Federal land purchases and local taxation. He said:

"The Government must use every means to obtain a fair and national distribution of the costs of war. It is not unpatriotic to ask proper compensation for private property taken for public use, neither is it improper to ask that the American public pay for local or community sacrifice on its behalf. Furthermore, there is no reason for expecting opposition to either proposal.

"The reported intention of the Federal Government to acquire many millions of terminal and other real estate in and near New York presents many problems both for officials, for realty taxpayers, and for all other property owners and potential taxpayers. Why? Government property being tax exempt, the purchase of real estate by the nation, the State or the city narrows the tax base. The budget must be raised on a smaller amount of property and therefore the general or realty tax rate is increased. And there is no actual relief through reinvestment of the purchase price, the amount of real estate being limited and the total of real estate values increasing by an incredibly low percentage—in spite of statements of single taxers to the contrary. In practice, especially at the present time, the purchase price disappears through investment in Liberty, or other tax exempt securities or else continues in some intangible form which may be legally taxable but actually escapes taxation.

Effect on Realty Situation.

"It is unfortunate that these Government purchases must come at a time when any such costly changes both in the tax base and in the local tax rate add to the already critical condition of all the realty interests. This is a serious matter in New York, and even more so in Hoboken, where the acquisition of the German piers automatically exempts several hundred thousand dollars as a source of city revenue.

"The advantages of municipal Government accrue to Federal property as well as to private property. The municipal services for a war plant are far more important and costly now than in times of peace. Such property is held for the protection and general welfare of the Californian as well as of the New Yorker.

"It therefore is but right that some provision be made for continuing the contribution of the property toward the expense of Government. For instance, there would seem to be no more reason in principle for the Bush Terminal ceasing to pay taxes than for the railways with which it connects. The city's service does not decrease in amount or cost, for its responsibilities are increased—and the entire nation benefits and should share in the expense. Yet the railways being controlled rather than owned will continue to pay their enormous contributions into innumerable public coffers—the New York Central will continue to be a taxpayer in over 600 tax districts in this State.

Part of Broad Problem.

"The discussion of this subject is incomplete if no mention is made of the broad problem of which it is a part. The propriety of tax exemptions is more and more before the court of public opinion, and there is a growing popular sentiment that the exemption list is unfair, that it shields hundreds of millions of private property which should pay for benefits received, and that if necessary to reach these tax dodgers all Government property should be placed on the tax list. This is a subject which should receive thorough investigation by the Mayor's Tax Committee, and it will receive the careful study of the recently appointed committee on taxation of the Advisory Council of Real Estate Interests."

VARICK STREET WIDENING AND NEW SUBWAYS WILL OPEN NEW AREA FOR DEVELOPMENT

One of the first tangible results of the widening of Varick Street, its connection with Seventh Avenue, and the completion of the new subway lines is the announcement that Trinity Church Corporation is prepared to consider the erection of modern fireproof buildings for tenants on long leases.

There is every indication that this west side district, which for years has lain dormant, is to receive a new lease of life, and is destined for large and important developments.

The opening of the subway and the widening of Varick Street come at a time when the financial district is greatly overcrowded, and coincidentally with the requisition of much office space by the Government. Business in many lines has increased beyond its normal rate; some concerns, having profited by the war, have found it necessary to enlarge their offices; new concerne are trying to establish branch agencies in the city, and no new buildings are being built. Office rentals have therefore risen vertically, and it is likely that as each lease now in effect expires the rate will be largely increased.

Many concerns are now occupying space on different floors, or even in several buildings, so that the office force is divided, supervision is lacking, the cost of operation is greatly increased, and office efficiency correspondingly decreased.

It is fair to say that the average rent paid for the space occupied by clerks is at least $1.85 per square foot per annum. The Liberty Loans, the Red Cross, the income tax, and the excess profits tax have taught American business men that although money may be easily made it is no longer proper or patriotic to waste it, and that the cost of operation must, if possible, be decreased rather than allowed to increase. Therefore, it is clear that relief must be sought and an outlet provided so that office space at cheaper rents and in large amounts can be secured. It is equally apparent that this cannot be done in the already established business centres.

Many have re-located in what is known as the Forty-second Street district, meaning thereby either Forty-second Street, or Madison Avenue, or Fifth Avenue, adjacent to that street. Such changes, however, have not caused any reduction in the rent per square foot, since real estate in that neighborhood has, during the last five years, greatly appreciated in value.

Many small concerns and a few larger ones have located there, and it is reported that on account of the satisfactory transit facilities, managers, officials, and clerks find the neighborhood a most satisfactory one in which to carry on business. Due, however, to the increase in the value of the land and the lack of new construction it is apparent that there will be no saving in rent in the re-location there of business hitherto conducted downtown.

The completion of the Seventh Avenue subway has called attention to the large area of poorly improved property lying along Varick Street, with Houston and King Streets as its centre. Most of the property in this district, comprising perhaps 300 lots, is in the ownership of Trinity Church Corporation. A large proportion of its property has only two and three-story brick dwellings now standing upon it, although on Hudson Street—one block to the west of Varick Street—there are modern fireproof buildings occupied by commercial concerns.

It is fair to assume that the average lot in Trinity's ownership is worth in the neighborhood of $20,000, or $8 a square foot, and that as Trinity Church Corporation owns so much property, and so many whole blocks in this district, it can be improved by the owners, or leased, or sold for improvement by others, so that the light and character of the improvements can all be controlled.

If there were only a few plots ready for improvement the objection could be raised that only a few business houses could locate there, and that they would be alone in a new field. This large area of cheap land, however, will provide locations for any number of occupants without causing a marked advance in the prices or rents to late comers. The way seems open, therefore, for a development in a large way and along broad lines.

The zoning law prescribes that east of Varick Street certain of the streets shall be maintained for residences; on Varick Street itself, however, office buildings and commercial buildings can be erected, but only to a height of 150 feet, meaning thereby a maximum of twelve floors.

When it is realized that Varick Street is now 100 feet wide, and that the Trinity Church Corporation can control the improvement of so many lots, it is evident that new buildings built pursuant to the regulations of the zoning law will enjoy an extent of light unknown in the financial district, where a thirty-story building on a narrow street darkens everything in its neighborhood and causes thousands of clerks to work and live in offices where lack of light and air seriously injures their health and detracts from their efficiency.

Since the average value of this land is only $8 per square foot, it follows that the rental to be charged for office buildings, or commercial buildings built thereon, will be little more than half the rent now paid in the older and more established business districts, where the price of land is from five to ten times greater than on Varick Street.

When it is realized that this Houston Street station on the new line can have direct stairway connection with buildings on the four blocks adjoining it, and that it will take only seven minutes to reach it from, say, Wall and William Streets, it is evident that the opportunity now presents itself, not only for a re-location of whole business staffs and managers, but also a possible separation of the clerks from their managing offices, if it should be necessary that the managing offices be close to Wall Street.

For some years a large force of clerks employed by a prominent downtown life insurance company was located in a building some blocks away from the offices of the President and managers, where better light was secured and much less rent paid than if they had been side by side with the managing staff. This same experiment has also been tried by one of the most important surety companies whose main offices are on lower Broadway. Were its clerks housed in the same building with its main office the rent per square foot would probably be doubled.

The experiment is pronounced a great success by the officials of this company. Doubtless there are many instances of this kind, and it is certain that they will multiply, due to the absolute necessity forced upon American business men of seeking by every means to cut down the cost of operation. The telephone and the subway now make it possible to separate managers and clerks if there is a saving in expense, health, and efficiency by so doing.

An inspection of this neighborhood at the moment produces a most discouraging effect, for although the street has been widened, the repairing of it is only now about to take place, buildings have been demolished for this widening and others have been cut in two.

Seventh Avenue while physically cut through and connecting with Varick Street has also not been paved; there are no sidewalks in place; many of the buildings on Trinity Church Corporation's property are of great age, and help to produce the impression that the neighborhood needs rebuilding.

However, the profits made in real estate have always been largest to those who first saw the vision, and, standing at the corner of Houston and Varick Streets, where the new station entrances are already constructed, it does not require much imagination to realize, with the Seventh Avenue trolley cars running on Varick Street, the Eighth Avenue trolley on Hudson Street, a station of the elevated railroad at Houston street two blocks west, a crosstown trolley line on Houston Street, and, most important, the new subway under one's feet, that the development of this great new section is imminent; that the demand for it has never been so great as it is now—and that the low price of the land, largely in one ownership, so close to the financial district and connected with all of the railroad stations by the new subway, is logical, and that it must take place.

The new subway passes through the financial section with stations at William and John Streets, and William and Wall Streets, and so under the river to Brooklyn. Going north it runs from Varick Street into Seventh Avenue, where it crosses the Hudson Tunnels at Christopher Street, connects with the Pennsylvania Station at Thirty-second Street, and joins the old subway at Forty-second Street, from which point it runs north, using the present tracks up Broadway, and so up Washington Heights to Van Cortlandt Park, or eastward into the Bronx.

A passenger wishing to go to the Grand Central Station or up Lexington Avenue will transfer at Forty-second Street, where a shuttle service will take him to the Grand Central or permit him to use the new east side Lexington Avenue subway without paying an additional fare.

It is therefore apparent that people living in Brooklyn, Long Island, Bronx, and in New Jersey wishing to reach this new section can do so with more speed and convenience than is now possible in their daily trip to the financial district.

Trinity apparently realizes the overcrowding of the financial district—the great increase of rents in office buildings there, and now calls the attention of the public to this great area of cheaper land awaiting improvement, and now made available for use.

BY PARCEL POST.

Steel Rivets Delivered by Mail for the Commodore.

Real estate men, architects, and builders will be interested in learning that structural steel can be shipped by parcel post.

One morning last week Daniel L. Norris of the Fuller Construction Company, signed for a 70-pound package containing steel rivets to be used in the 16,000-ton steel skeleton for the Commodore, which is now being built by John McE. Bowman, adjacent to the Grand Central Terminal at Forty-second Street and Lexington Avenue. The steel rivets that came by parcel post were the first of a lot of 360 pounds in all, shipped by the American Bridge Company of Ambridge, Penn., which has the steel contract for the Commodore.

Rapid progress is being made on the construction, and every indication now points to its completion in December of this year. The hotel will be twenty-six stories in height and will contain 2,000 rooms. The completion has been delayed owing to America's entry into the war, but the clearing up of the freight and steel situation is expected to bring about its completion this year. Three different times all the steel work in the shops was stopped by the Government. Out of the 16,000 tons of steel necessary for the construction of the hotel, about 13,500 tons have been rolled. Practically all the material, furnishings, &c., are in storage or ready for delivery at the factories. All the contracts for furniture, glass, china, linen, carpets, and hangings were made before the present war.

PAVEMENT WEAR AND TEAR.

$2,800,000 Needed for Repairing Streets in Manhattan.

Wear and tear of city pavements is yearly becoming more intense, according to Borough President Dowling of Manhattan, who needs $2,800,000 for repaving the streets of the borough.

The weight of vehicles is increasing, but the width of the vehicle tires is not increasing to a corresponding degree. This means that the grinding process of wheels on pavements is becoming more acute and the life of the pavement is decreasing.

Several years ago an attempt was made by the city authorities to regulate vehicle weights and tire widths. But it was found that the city's licensing rights, at least as far as motor vehicles were concerned, had been taken away by the State.

Under the State law New York City has been receiving between $700,000 and $800,000 a year as its share of the vehicle licenses. In return, the city is expected to spend $4,000,000 a year in the upkeep of the pavements and in the restoration of worn-out roadways.

The situation is further aggravated by the fact that asphalt which cost $12.50 a ton in 1915, and $20 a ton in 1917, now costs $32 a ton. The average life of pavements in New York City before the advent of the automobile was fifteen years.

The medium-weight automobiles reduced this average to eleven years. Today only one-third of the granite pavement in Manhattan is beyond that age, while one-half of the asphalt is never than that. Only one-quarter of the wood block has been down more than eleven years.

DENY PROFITEERING CHARGE

Owners Say Increases in Rents Are Justifiable.

The charge that owners of apartment houses are rent profiteers, taking advantage of unusual conditions, is emphatically denied by not only realty owners, but by the entire real estate fraternity.

No denial is made of the fact that an increase of from 10 to 20 per cent. has been made and will be demanded for October renewals, but it is claimed that the increase is justifiable owing to the increased cost of labor, coal, and material.

The New York Building Managers' Association admit that October renewals for apartments are being substantially increased. They qualify this statement, however, in pointing to the fact that wherever such increases have been found necessary they have been mainly in the case of renewals of old leases made several years ago.

At that time new apartments were flooding the market with an insufficient supply of tenants with which to fill them at rentals commensurate with the cost of operation. Building managers were forced to accept offers usually considerably below the schedule of rentals upon which an apartment house could be operated and yet yield a fair return to the owner.

A member of the association said yesterday:

"Since all commodities which enter into the maintenance, renovation, and improvement of an apartment house have increased in price from 100 to 300 per cent.; since there is a rise of 30 points in the new tax rate; a flat 10 per cent. increase in insurance rates; with an embargo placed on the storage of Winter coal by the Government; with coal itself nearly three times the cost of two years ago, and with wages soaring, tenants must realize the justification of an increase in rents.

"Advantage is not being taken of the shortage of apartments as an occasion for increasing rents, and profiteering is not being practiced, and even with the increased rentals net returns to owners will not be any greater than before the war, when present war prices of labor, material, taxes, and insurance did not exist."

Douglas L. Elliman of Douglas L. Elliman & Co. said: "The charge that the owners of apartment houses are rent profiteers, as has been made in a few instances, can be absolutely disproved. When it is considered that the cost of coal has risen 300 per cent., the cost of labor over 50 per cent., the cost of paint and other materials used in repairing apartments an average of nearly 100 per cent., and all the other items of operating property rising with equal rapidity, an increase of from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. will not even give the owners a net return equal to that which they have enjoyed in previous years.

"We have found that our tenants in renewing their leases at the higher rates, and new tenants who pay the increased rents, are most reasonable in their recognition of the facts stated above. We have had practically no trouble in our many buildings satisfying the tenants that the increase was a fair one.

"Through extraordinary efforts on our part and most of the real estate agents, buildings in the great Park Avenue apartment section were kept warm during the recent coal shortage, and the tenants know of the great difficulty in securing coal and have shown a thorough appreciation of the care which was taken of them, and are now reciprocating by paying the higher rental made necessary through the increased cost of operation with hardly a murmur of protest.

"In fact, the relationship between landlord and tenant is on a more friendly basis today than for a great many years past. The mutual interest of both has been disclosed by the unavoidable hardships of each, due to orders issued by the Coal Administrator. This included the shutting down of the steam dryers, refrigerating plants, and all unnecessary machinery in order that such coal as was available could be conserved.

"On account of the lack of new buildings there is a great shortage of apartments, which will probably grow worse rather than better, and if the owners had desired to take full advantage of the situation rents might have been increased to a far greater extent.

"That these increases are justified very few tenants question, and we are effecting renewals with greater facility than ever before and expect to have all of our buildings full well in advance of the 1st of October, when most leases start."

According to the Building Trades Employers Association wages have increased at least 25 per cent. during the past few months and further advances will go into effect in June and July.

There is no asphaltum in the market. Portland cement is constantly climbing in price owing to the Government demand and the increased cost of bagging. WAR CHEST PLAN FOR RAISING MONEY

It Has Proved Tremendously Successful in Many Cities and Towns—Experiences of Utica Campaigners.

THE people of Athens County, Ohio, have just filled their War Chest. The people of Utica, N. Y.; of Syracuse, of Rome, of Auburn, of other towns and small communities have also filled theirs. The War Chest idea is spreading through the country, the raising in one great drive of a year's funds for all war relief. Somewhat to their own surprise, the people who have set up a War Chest for their community are finding that the collection of money is not the only—not even the biggest—thing that the War Chest campaign does.

"I haven't a doubt that Utica raised nearly five times as much money for war work by the War Chest method as it would have raised in any other way," said Beecher M. Crouse, one of the "Generals" of the campaign there, "but that isn't the most important thing. The most important thing is psychological. There isn't any one in Utica now who doesn't realize this war."

Utica has a population of about 85,000, of whom about 23,000 are mill employes. The town counted its war work quota at about $700,000, and set itself to raise that sum in one whirlwind campaign. It raised $1,078,000 in seven days. That amount is now pledged for war work by the people of Utica for the coming year—until February, 1919. It constitutes the War Fund from which gifts to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, the Y. W. C. A., all the agencies for war relief and war service, are being made. By proclamation of the Mayor, the citizens of Utica may not be asked for any war relief contributions during the year, the one exception to this rule is in solicitation for membership in the Red Cross, where the actual object asked is not primarily money.

"The crux of the whole matter," said Mr. Crouse, "is organization. The city was so organized, that the men directing the drive would reach right straight down to every individual citizen in town."

There was one War Chest Chairman, C. F. Maynard, and under him four Division Generals. Each of these had complete charge of the campaign in his "quarter" of the city, and the community was divided according to the classification that seemed to promise the best results. Division A was made up solely of subscriptions from corporations. Division B included all the individual and otherwise unclassified subscriptions from $1,000 up. Division C comprised the subscriptions of all employes in the manufacturing plants of the city. Division D consisted of small contributions, all below $1,000, not otherwise covered.

"This plan offered little duplication," continued Mr. Crouse, "and it served a good purpose in its division of subscriptions; every one knew just where he stood, and there was no danger of a man's giving less than $1,000 when he was able to give more. As a matter of fact, they all gave splendidly.

"I was in charge of Division C, and in this as in the other groups a military line of organization was followed. I had a Colonel as my direct assistant, and he had two Adjutants under him. The manufacturing plants were grouped in twenty divisions, each under a staff Captain, and under him each plant had a plant Captain of its own; each department in the plant had a department Captain, and when there were more than ten employes in any one department there was a Lieutenant for every ten men. In this way I had a perfect chain, reaching directly to every man in every boiler room.

"There was no minimum set for the gifts; anybody could give anything. But we tried to have the contributions not less than $12 a year—25 cents a week, with two weeks to spare.

"I expected to get about $60,000 from the men. It was just at the beginning of the heatless holidays, and it was a bad time, as it happened, to be asking for money from mill workers. I thought we had certainly no right to expect more than $60,000. Well, we got $278,100.

"Ninety-eight per cent. of the employes came into the War Chest Fund. In seven-eighths of the plants 100 per cent. of the men contributed. Several mills there were actually strikes because the men would not go on working with the two or three of their fellow-laborers who had refused to help.

"Of course it was a whirlwind campaign. We had forty or fifty speakers. The town was postered thoroughly. Every one helped. The mills closed at stated times, for instance, to hear my speakers, and I had five wounded Canadians come down to talk to the men, and they went to every one of the mills and told the workers about the war. Of course, too, every worker for the fund gave his services. There was no charge for salaries of speakers. Our greatest expense was in buttons for contributors to wear; then we had window cards, posters, advertisements, and a good deal of printing. The expense of the whole campaign was about $7,000. There were about two hundred men altogether directing the drive, speaking, organizing. They used to meet every day at luncheon and talk things over. Each one paid for his own lunch.

"We hadn't been in it many days," he continued, "before we saw it was a big thing, in much more than the amount of money we hoped to raise. The effect on the people was tremendous. The war was brought home to the people of Utica—no effort was spared to make them understand it, and they do understand it. In Utica we don't feel that the war is four thousand miles away and hasn't a great deal to do with our personal lives. It's a close thing to us.

"I used to notice that in the mills. The spirit among the employes, as I said, was wonderful. The workmen in Utica realize the war. They are interested in it. They know it's their war. They know, and their employers know, that it is something which employe and employer are simply facing shoulder to shoulder. I notice everywhere in the mills a better feeling that this War Chest campaign was causing between employers and employed; they seemed to understand each other better, drew closer to each other.

"I think the same must be true of every place where the War Chest campaign has been carried through. Each community is a conscious unit in work for the war.

"Since we began our drive, we have been getting telegrams from all parts of the country asking for information about the plan. Wallace J. Ross, Secretary of the Knit Goods Manufacturers of America, has information and clippings on hand to answer any questions from other communities. Of course our plan followed that of Syracuse."

The War Chest of Syracuse was filled soon after the United States entered the war, in the late Spring of last year, and many other communities followed the example. The latest is Athens County, Ohio, which set $360,000 as the minimum to be raised during March, and which began with a subscription of $140,000 voted by the miners of Hocking Valley.

Some one said of the Athens drive: "Under this plan you know what your duty is, and if necessary some one helps you do it. The spirit of patriotism is splendid throughout the county."

SCHOOL CELEBRATES 100TH ANNIVERSARY

MEMBERS of the B. D. L. Southerland Association of Grove Street Grammar School 3, old graduates of the school, will gather at a banquet on Wednesday evening, April 17, at the Aldine Club, to celebrate the 100th anniversary of "Old No. 3," as they affectionately call the institution. Schools which can point to 100 years of unbroken existence in these parts are rare, and the graduates of No. 3 are brimming with pride and enthusiasm at the record of the one in Greenwich Village, where scores of men famous in the annals of New York were taught.

Early in 1818 the Trustees of the Free School Society saw the importance of establishing a school in the northwestern section of the city, and, having received information that a room on the second floor of the old Watch House, or Police Station, corner of Christopher and Hudson Streets, could be procured from the corporation of the city for school purposes, appointed a committee to make application for the premises, and, if found suitable, to prepare them for the reception of pupils. It reported on May 1 that the arrangements had been made, and Shepherd Johnston, who had been trained in Free School 1, was appointed teacher at $300 per year.

Grammar School 3 was opened on May 25, 1818, with fifty-one pupils, the number being increased to 196 before June 3. It increased in numbers so rapidly that at the meeting of the board, held on June 23, it was reported that 216 scholars had been admitted, with a regular attendance of over 200, and the room not being large enough the upper floor was then taken for school purposes.

The first school building of old No. 3 was a wooden structure, 45 feet by 80 feet, erected in 1820 on Grove Street, near Hudson Street, and was opened for boys on Oct. 15 of that year, and for girls the following Monday, Oct. 22, and, after having been altered and repaired many times, it was finally replaced in 1899 by a handsome brick and stone structure. In 1888 an annex was built on the old schoolhouse. While the school authorities were contemplating another change in old No. 3, it was swept away by a disastrous fire on Feb. 14, 1905, its library, containing many valuable books, oil paintings (the gifts of former graduating classes,) and its celebrated electrical apparatus being consumed by the conflagration. In 1905-6 the present school No. 3 was erected, to which the auditorium was added in 1916, and in the same year the B. D. L. Southerland Association of Grove Street Grammar School 3 was instrumental in having it named the B. D. L. Southerland School in honor of its former beloved Principal.

In the early days of the school it was famous for its "sand system," which was a table provided for the youngest scholars; it was 15 feet long and 6 inches wide and was divided longitudinally into two parts, one-half being set off so as to form a shallow tray, with an inclosing rail or ledge about one inch high. The bottom of the tray was stained or painted black, and over it was spread a thin coating of sand. The table was provided with a "sand-smoother" made of sole leather, into the edge of which three notches were cut so that when used it left three ridges or rules the entire length of the table. In the sand thus ruled the beginners were taught to form letters, using a stick about as thick as a quill and four inches long.

In its day this sand system was considered a great improvement and so remarkable that General Lafayette was invited to inspect the work.

Teachers have served longer in this school, and with fewer changes, than in any other in New York City. Mr. Benjamin de Lamater Southerland, who was born on April 10, 1829, was connected with it during the greater part of his life, first as a pupil in 1838, then as a teacher until 24 years of age, when he resigned to become Principal of a school in Flushing, L. I. In 1856 he returned to No. 3 and became Vice Principal and teacher of its highest class. In 1867 he succeeded the celebrated Dr. David Patterson as Principal, a position he held throughout a long and honored career, relinquishing it only when failing health compelled him to do so on June 30, 1902. He passed away on Dec. 1, 1905.

NEW STYLES SIMPLE AND CHARMING

High Hats All the Rage—Straight and Narrow Skirts—Tailored Suits Still in Favor—Pastel Colors—Gold and Silver Cloth on Evening Gowns.

EASTER is the traditional moment for the new Spring finery to make its first appearance, and though tradition in this respect has been somewhat dimmed by the war, it is none the less an exciting dress occasion.

As a straw to show which way the wind is blowing, there is no finer example than Atlantic City. For years past and through the present Eastertime the Boardwalk there has seen a vast throng of beautifully gowned women. There is no better spot from which to observe what are the favorite fashions.

This year the throng was as gay and as well dressed as ever. Perhaps the quality of the clothing had changed a trifle from the elaborate to the severe, but the existing note of fashion was surely as charming as ever and as worthy to be copied by those who call themselves well dressed.

The hats were beautiful. Unmistakably this crowd displayed the fact that crowns are to be high—the higher the better, apparently, for each seemed to be trying to be taller than its neighbors. In other words, if a hat wishes to outshine all others this season it "grows and grows until it can grow no longer." It accepts anything as a means to this mad end. Feathers are pointed straight into the air; wide grosgrain ribbon is arranged flat and stiffly tailored to make a towering hat on a neat turban brim of straw; uneven-looking feathers grow like so many weeds from the crown of the hat; turbans are built up entirely of draped satin or lacquered ribbon made into stiffened bows and standing in a stiff manner above a high coiffure. Another favorite hat was of blocked Milan or lisere straw, perfect in shape and pressing, with its tiny and almost invisible feather curled directly in front and standing straight above the forehead, or perhaps coquettishly to one side or the other—it did not seem to matter at all which side was chosen. There is a lot of individuality in a feather like this.

Navy blue hats and black hats are still the smartest of all creations. They were there by the seaside in great numbers, and wherever they were seen they carried their own inimitable distinction. Though many more flowers than usual dotted the landscape, still one was pleased when one came upon a hat of plain black or unpretentious dark blue. A touch of color is all very well, but for plain and unadulterated smartness the sombre-colored thing superlatively well done wins every time.

Poke bonnets and variations on their theme were prominent. They had perky little bunches of posies at the front and on the tip of their demure high crowns; they were faced with fascinating colors in pastel to offset youthful faces; they had ribbons of slender widths and variegated hues strung about them in original ways, but often dropping down at back in veritable streamers or caught under the brim in truly grandmotherly fashion.

Veils were there in plenty, but by no means always. That is, if one prefers to present one's uncovered visage to the world it is still quite permissible to do so. Fashion, though she loves the feminine and alluring qualities of the veil, does not yet insist upon its use.

Perhaps the newest thing that has made its appearance this season in the way of trimming is the wide and handsome fringe. At Atlantic City it was used in many ways, and always by the most smartly gowned of women. It fluttered from the edges of wide and flowing capes; it graced the ends of otherwise simply hanging tunics; it edged straight a loosely hanging panel; it even hung, in instances, about the edges of skirts themselves, and for the ends of wide-cuffed sleeves it was quite the thing. Always this fringe is the color of the thing it decorates—black on black and green on green, so that its handsome quality is the point that carries it triumphant through all.

Very few patterns were seen among these early Spring things, either in linings for coats or in gowns. Everything was simple and plain and apparently unadorned, though everything proved to be gorgeously conceived and put together when it was subjected to strict examination.

Gray and taupe are two colors that are certainly in favor. They are more to be seen than ever before, and have a Springiness about them that cannot be claimed by any of the more sombre and usual colors.

The weather at Eastertime, while it had every appearance of Springtime, had nevertheless a cold breath about it. Therefore there were lots of furs visible. It was quite apparent, however, that of all of these fur coverings were left over from Winter. Many of them were unmistakably brand new. The favorites were waist-length capes, sleeves full and bloused at the waist lines. Squirrel was prominent among them. Gray of that shade harmonizes beautifully with thin garments. Kolinsky for capelets has lost none of its popularity if its constant appearance among the Easter crowds meant anything. Beaver and its sister fur, nutria, are also in favor among smartly clad women. These furs adapt themselves most gracefully to the present full and somewhat shapeless fashions.

Black Satin and a Crushed Crown for a New Spring Hat.

Dress of Putty Gabardine and Gold-Embroidered Cerise Taffeta.

Most of the skirts were kept to ankle length. The minute a skirt is lowered or lifted from this accepted length it seems to lose something of the chic that marks it with distinction. Straight and narrow is the rule for all the skirts, though some of them are pleated and kept flat and to the straight lines. Others are draped a little, and those that are ultra new in character are draped and slit to the knees at back.

Suits were in the Easter parade in great abundance. Dresses are popular, but they seem to have robbed not one atom from the prestige of the tailored suit. It retains its old-time position with a conscious ease of manner. The tailored suit—severely tailored—is having a great run. In all this feeling for simplicity of dress, what could be more appropriate? Have not business women for years held tightly to the fashion of a tailored suit? Englishwomen have never allowed it to wane, and now the women engaged in war work have taken it up again. Mannish skirts of heavy silk and satin are the things to be worn with these suits. Sometimes they have finely pleated bosoms by way of being constant to their mannish pattern, and always they have turn-down and standing soft collars, slightly crushed about the neck. The suits as a whole retain the tubelike silhouette, the only thing that is not allowed being a divergence from this straight and narrow line.

With the suits of less severely tailored character one sees a touch of color in the shape of interesting and original little blouses, and in the new and constantly changing waistcoats. Here there is every latitude allowed for the expression of an individuality, no matter how individual it may be. And there is opportunity, too, for the constant display of a needed variety and change all within the limits of one small suit. Many waistcoats and many blouses are the things that add color to the days and a fresh and changing look to a woman's personality. Perhaps the very newest thing in the way of a waistcoat is the one of accordion-pleated organdie. It is bound to be popular.

As for color, when there is any decided color on the new Spring suits, it is usually pastel in character. Bright and startling colors are avoided, but many are the bizarre effects obtained from the paler colors in unusual combinations. They are embroidered or appliqued, or worked in with pleatings and frills of fine organdie and voile. These artistic touches are the points that make the gown and add expression to its enforced wartime plainness.

Shoes are becoming more and more practical in their general character. No more is it usual to see pumps with feet rolling in and out of them, momentarily endangering their wearer's equilibrium. Now oxfords of one form or another are again the fashion. Not only are they cool and comfortable, and at the same time good looking, but they have the inestimable quality of staying on the feet. Dark brown oxfords of soft kid are the thing, pointed and plain of toe and worn with stockings to match. These shoes are also made in black of patent leather, which are most effective, and in plain black leather, too. They are shown in shades of pearl and dove gray, which are bound to be popular when the warmer days come. The heels on these shoes may be almost any height that is desired. The ones with slightly curved French heels are very smart.

Evening clothes were much worn at Atlantic City during the Easter vacation days. As a rule they were simple and unpretentious in character, though made of excellent fabrics. Color was not in riot among them, and no one shade could be said to have found the first place of favor. Silk net or tulle was used in great abundance, and there were quantities of gold and silver cloth to be seen among the throngs of diners. Lace was found on many a lavish evening frock, and in almost every instance it was of the rich and real sort. It was done in black and in white and in cream.

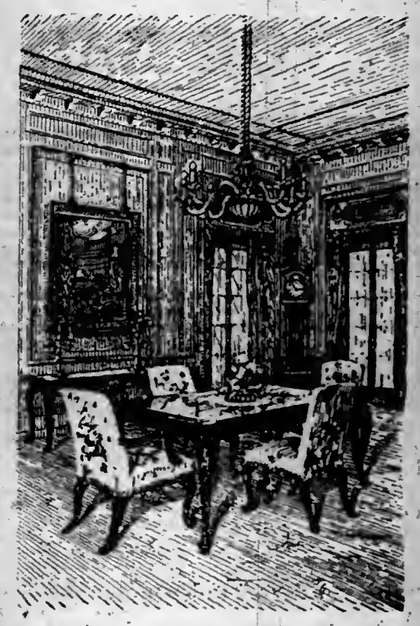
Delightful Interiors



Success in the planning of a room depends upon the grace of good judgment, rather than lavish expenditure—

¶ Indeed, some of the most delightful interiors are those in which the appointments are quite simple in character—yet so well disposed in relation to their setting that the whole effect is pleasing beyond expression.

¶ The opportunity to achieve such results is nowhere better presented than at these interesting Galleries. On view here are many simple yet singularly charming groups and occasional pieces of Furniture at well within a moderate cost. BOMBARDING SHIPS RESCUE 2,000 GREEKS

Remarkable Escape of Starving Exiles from Hands of Turks Brought to New York by Two of Those Saved

By R. LAVINIA HANTON.

A CROWD of homeless, hopeless human beings had gathered, August 9, 1917, in the town of Ordou, Asia Minor, which is near the southeast edge of the Black Sea. They were Greek exiles whom the long arm of the war had touched on the shoulders, had directed from their homes all along the coast, pointing them on a journey toward the end of which they knew not of. There were 10,000 of them at Ordou on the very ground where the Argonauts, famed in fable, took ship for their adventurous, but successful, quest of the Golden Fleece.

Because the spirit of hope never dies, it is possible that a faint optimism stirred within them that some modern Jason would appear to deliver them. Then—out across the sea the outline of a ship appeared clearly silhouetted against the skyline. Another and another came in sight, until a flotilla of nine warships and three torpedo boats, all flying the Russian flag, came into clear view and lined up in battle array. (It is perhaps needless to assail the intelligence of the reader by saying that Ordou was in the possession of the Turks, Trebizond, a few hundred miles west of Ordou on the same coastline, had come into the possession of the Russians.) Fearing to cheer, even could their voices have been heard; weak, as they were, from starvation and sickness, the half-terrified refugees waited huddling.

Suddenly there was a puff of smoke and uncertainty was ended. A shell dropped and exploded. Ordou was being bombarded.

The explanation was that the Russian naval force had been ordered to make a surprise attack on Ordou, clear the town of its Turkish soldiery sufficiently to enter and destroy certain ammunition depots and an airplane centre known to be there. This the Russians proceeded to do. Having sent the Turks to the rear in a temporary retreat, landing parties were sent ashore from the armed ships. As the small boats approached, the inmates beheld the half-fearful, half-welcoming congregation of exiles on the shore. The former were not on a sight-seeing expedition, however, and quickly formed ranks. They swarmed through the streets and, after locating the points of their search, blew the buildings with contents to atoms.

By this time the number of exiles on the shore had been augmented by those who had come out of hiding, and now followed the Russians about imploring them for protection.

But the latter had no orders to provide for a small army of exiles. While the leaders among the exiles talked with those among the Russians commanding the landing party, the men, women, and children along the waterfront began taking it for granted that the bombardment was merely part of a plan for their special deliverance.

At last the hoped-for order was given on the warships, a concession to the importunities of the exiles' leaders, whose pleadings could not be utterly denied. Those in the crowd nearest the landing boats were ordered into them and were taken to one of the ships. This was the signal for a wild scramble to the water's edge. Two thousand men, women, and children scaled the rope ladders from the little boats. Then instead of making another trip to shore through the surf, as was expected, the landing boats were hauled up to their davits! A wild cry went up from the shore. Mothers held out their arms frantically to children peeping through the deck-rails of the ships, daughters screamed to their mothers and fathers on shore; in vain husbands called to their young wives.

The ships moved seaward, with more than their mission accomplished against the haze where the line of water merged into the line of the sky. Many hours later the human cargo was landed at Trebizond.

The story of the rescue of 2,000 exiles at Ordou by a Russian naval vessel comes to New York with two Greek refugees who were among the fortunate to escape. They are Lazaros George Macrides and Miss Evterpi G. Kantargi, now living with relatives in Brooklyn. Mr. Macrides and Miss Kantargi were among those nearest the water's edge when the work of embarkation commenced and he was among the first to be taken abroad. In the confusion he became separated from his companion and when he got to the deck began a search for her. Failing to find her anywhere on the ship, he scanned the faces of the people on the shore. At last he glimpsed her struggling in the water where she had been thrown from the small boat taking her to the ship. Macrides jumped overboard and swam to the rescue of the girl, who was nearly drowned when he reached and rescued her.

This romantic bit—the fortunate ending of the adventure of these young people—is only a shining thread in the tragic story of the Greek exiles now being driven into Asia Minor.

At the outbreak of the great war there was estimated to be about five million Greek Christians in Turkey, all subject to Turkish rule. According to the latest, and most trustworthy, information some seven or eight hundred thousand have been deported, and the remainder are living under the constant dread of being summoned any day to the road and the march. The region from which they have been gathered, and sent to the interior, is bounded by the Black Sea on the north, the coast lines of the Aegean, the Marmora and Mediterranean Seas on the west, the coastline of the Mediterranean Sea on the south, and an imaginary line from Alexandretta to Trebizond on the east.

On Saturday, July 20, 1917, the following orders came from the Army Headquarters at Shelshelie (Endered):

"By July 25 let no Greek man over 16 and under 50 be found in Ordou. Send all such on into the interior. As for the families, we will send further orders later."

It was a little more than two weeks later that 2,000 people of Ordou were rescued by the Russian ships. Those who were left fell under the fatal order. The reason Mr. Macrides had been spared deportation was because he happened to be in the employ of a military official of Ordou. In this way he was in Ordou the day of the naval bombardment. He is now doing what he can to assist the Relief Committee for Greeks in Asia Minor, with headquarters at 1 Madison Avenue, New York. He says:

"Deportation in Asia Minor is a euphemism for the most heartless and relentless cruelty. It means the loss of home, business property, and every personal possession. It means being driven into the desert places, forced to march at the point of the bayonet until strength is exhausted; being refused shelter, food, and drink; subject to outrage and calculated cruelty; facing, always, death by violence or from the cumulative effect of exposure, sickness and starvation. The people are herded and goaded like animals. The desperate refugees subsist chiefly on offal; graze like cattle on the roots of scanty grass tufts that push their dry and dusty stems above the sandy soil. It is impossible for words to give an adequate idea of the tragedy of bare existence under such awful conditions.

"Many dropped by the roadside, to die where they fell. Others that I know of went insane. And that was only at the beginning. They are still marching on!"

Centres of relief have been established at various points in Asia Minor and the Near East. Working in co-operation with organization channels direct to these centres of relief, the Greek Relief Committee can reach many of these unfortunate people. Rollin P. Grant, President of the Irving National Bank, Woolworth Building, New York, is Treasurer of the Greek organization and is receiving contributions. Working with him are Frank W. Jackson, former United States Consul to Petras, Chairman of the committee; B. D. Dugundji, Vice Chairman; Jacob Gould Schurman, Honorary Chairman; Professor J. P. Xenides, Secretary; Hamilton Holt, Henry Morgenthau, Talcott Williams, and others.

REPATRIATING WOMEN AND CHILDREN

THREE hundred and fifty thousand helpless French women and children, taken from their homes in the occupied provinces, have been returned to France through Evian, in Switzerland, according to Dr. Esther Lovejoy of the Red Cross Commission, who has just returned from a survey of conditions among people from the invaded territory.

In a report to the Woman's Committee of the Council of National Defense Dr. Lovejoy tells of the repatriation of these unfortunates. "About 50 per cent. of these convoys are made up of children between 3 and 12 years of age. Sometimes whole orphanages are emptied and trainloads of children sent alone. Some of these children have been lost by their mothers in the confusion that attended the invasion three and a half years ago. They have suffered the war blight. They are undersized, ill-nourished, and afflicted.

"The French Government and the refugee department of the American Red Cross are co-operating in caring for these people. In twenty places in France there are delegates to receive convoys and help them in every possible way to begin life in a new place. Lord Kitchener's sister is one of these delegates at Cote du Nord."

PATRIOTIC EVENTS STAGED BY SOCIETY

Plays, Bridge, and Dog Show Among War Relief Events—Society's Foreign Legion—Three Per Cent. of Junior League Members in Service Abroad—Bumper Crop of Spring Engagements.

THE second week of the post-Lenten season has much to offer by way of entertainment. But patriotic and war relief service tops the social bill, and society is a headliner in the big events staged for the national cause.

One word has become obsolete in society's dictionary, and on this, the anniversary of the entry of the United States into the war, it seems appropriate to mention the shelving of the word—gay. Events may be animated, picturesque, and financially successful, but things are no longer gay. Some folks even speak of dances now as being sad.

The closing weeks of the opera will be replete with social interest. The parterre row reflects much of what is animating the world of society and the presence of notable visitors. The falling of the Metropolitan curtain on the last night really rings down the formal season and heralds the inauguration of the "little" season, when society lingers betwixt town and country. But few plans for the Summer will be laid until after the Liberty Loan campaign is over, in which so many women of prominence are lending their aid.

A happy spot in town during the afternoons is the arena of Madison Square Garden, where the circus holds forth before the children enthroned in the boxes with their governesses, and, higher up, in the baleonies and galleries, with their cousins and aunts. At night the boxes are crowded with society people, when dowagers become young again and, in spite of their dignity, laugh at the clowns. For minds haunted by war news the circus is a great panacea.

One of the important events of the week was the luncheon held yesterday at the Ritz-Carlton by the President and Trustees of the French Institute of the United States in honor of M. André Tardieu, French High Commissioner, on the occasion of the first anniversary of this country's entry into the war. Afterward came the private view, for the guests at luncheon, of the exhibition of French prints of the eighteenth century in the museum's gallery, 599 Fifth Avenue. The first public view of the prints opens tomorrow, to continue throughout the week. McDougall Hawkes is President of the Institute.

The private view of the annual exhibition of the National Association of Women Painters and Sculptors, of which Mrs. Henry Mottet is President, will be held tomorrow at 6 West Fifty-seventh Street. The exhibition will be open thereafter to April 30.

An interesting entertainment will be held in the ballroom of the Adolph Lewisohn house, 881 Fifth Avenue, on Wednesday for the benefit of the Food for France Fund. Admission will be by invitation only and no tickets are to be sold.

EASTER week, after all, held its own in the matter of weddings, and it looks now as if the rest of the month would have its usual quota. Still, the effect of war is plainly seen in the number of surprise marriages, and those that are only announced a few days preceding the date set. Small weddings are in the majority, although society welcomes the large ones.

Yesterday was a red-letter day in nuptials, and there was a brilliant attendance at all of the church affairs. The colors of Spring in costumes and floral decorations add the needed note of charm to the big weddings, and it is about the only chance society has to observe its young men in service in their smart uniforms at close range.

Among the brides of yesterday were the Misses Marion W. Vanderhoef, Maud Louise O'Brien, Irene Turnure, Alice Baldwin, and Frances Moore, the latter a bride of Washington, D. C.

While the week is almost void of nuptials, according to the social calendar, many are sure to come up unexpectedly before the week is half spent.

Miss Josephine Danforth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Danforth of this city and Tarrytown-on-Hudson, will be married on Saturday, April 20, to Lieutenant Graham T. Johnston, U. S. R. Another wedding on the 20th will be that of Miss Cornelia Stuyvesant Gibson, daughter of Mrs. J. Breckenridge Gibson, and Walter E. Dickinson of this city, which is to be celebrated in Yonkers.

The surprise wedding of the week for society, of course, was that of Mrs. Mabel Whitney Sabin, daughter of the late William Minot Whitney of Albany, and Dextar Blagden, son of Mrs. George Blagden, which was quietly celebrated on Monday in the chantry of Grace Church, with a breakfast afterward at the home of the bride, 38 East Fortieth Street. Mr. and Mrs. Blagden have gone South on their honeymoon, and will pass the Summer at Monmouth Beach, N. J. Mrs. Blagden has a son, Charles H. Sabin, Jr., by her first marriage, her son being a student at St. Mark's School. Her first husband, whom she divorced in 1916, was Charles H. Sabin, President of the Guaranty Trust Company, who afterward married Mrs. Pauline Morton Smith, daughter of the late Paul Morton.

The early post-Lenten season has been prolific with engagements.

Lieut. Col. Van Rensselaer C. King, who is now in France, has announced the engagement of his sister, Miss Jeanne King, of 270 Park Avenue, to Lieutenant Charles De Rham, Jr., of the 306th Infantry, stationed at Camp Upton. Miss King is the daughter of the late David J. King, Jr. Her brother's engagement to Mrs. Jewett Minturn of this city has also been announced. Mrs. Minturn is serving with the Red Cross in France. Lieutenant De Rham is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles De Rham of 324 Fifth Avenue, and belongs to the Knickerbocker and Harvard Clubs, being a graduate of Harvard, class of 1910.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Woodin of 127 East Sixty-ninth Street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary Woodin, to Lieutenant Charles Miner of the 109th Field Artillery, U. S. A., a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William P. Miner of Wilkes-Barre, Penn.

Miss Florence Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andraw A. Smith of 60 East Ninety-first Street, is to wed John Henry Shine, son of James Shine of Cohoes, N. Y. Miss Smith, who is a sister of Miss Helen Smith, made her début two seasons ago, and is a graduate of the Convent of the Sacred Heart. The engagement has just been announced.

The engagement of Miss Helen H. Jervis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Perley V. Jervis of Brooklyn, to Karl Wendell Kirchwey, son of Dr. and Mrs. George W. Kirchwey, has been told. Mr. Kirchwey is a graduate of Yale, also of the Columbia Law School. His father was formerly Dean of Columbia Law School.

Miss Idee Wood, daughter of Mrs. Philip M. Wood of Jamaica, L. I., is to marry Lieutenant James Humphrey Hustis, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Hustis of Winchester, Mass. Mr. Hustis, Sr., is President of the Boston & Maine Railroad, and his son enlisted in the 11th Engineers, which was one of the first regiments to be assigned to active service in France.

Dr. and Mrs. Paul E. Outerbridge of 40 West Seventy-fourth Street have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Helen Elizabeth Outerbridge, to Walter Amory, a Second Lieutenant in the Royal Flying Corps of the British service and son of Mr. and Mrs. Copley Amory of this city.

Another engagement of interest is that of Miss Annie Gilbert, daughter of Mrs. Riley Miles Gilbert of 563 Park Avenue, to Donald Fairfax Cammann, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Cammann of this city. Miss Gilbert was introduced to society several years ago, and is a sister of Mrs. Edwin N. Hickman.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Chauncey McKeever of 125 East Sixty-sixth Street announce the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Edith McKeever, to Ensign Richmond Cobb, U. S. N. R., a son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ives Cobb of 161 East Seventy-ninth Street. Miss McKeever has been active in the doings of the younger set since her début, and since war was declared identified with war relief work. Ensign Cobb is one of five brothers, all of whom have entered the war service.

The engagement of Lady Sybil Cutting, widow of W. Bayard Cutting, Jr., to Geoffrey Scott of the British Embassy at Rome, was announced recently in London by her parents, the Earl and Countess of Desert, but it did not become known here until late in the week, when it was announced that their marriage was shortly to take place in Florence, Italy, where Lady Cutting has resided since the death of her husband, in Egypt, some years ago.

A son was born last week to Lieutenant and Mrs. Edward Hinman, Jr., of 340 Park Avenue. Mrs. Hinman was formerly Miss Elsie Gridley. Lieutenant Hinman is with the American Expeditionary Forces in France.

ON Saturday afternoon, at 2:30 o'clock, the Barnard Club unit of the Duryea War Relief is to hold a benefit bridge at the Hotel Plaza. This organization is aiding a great cause in a very practical way, and a large attendance is promised at the bridge. Mrs. Myron C. Taylor of 16 East Seventieth Street, Chairman, is receiving applications for tickets.

Among the patronesses are Mrs. Nina Duryea, Mrs. Charles D. Wadsworth, Mrs. Edwin W. Morse, Mrs. Charles H. Ditson, Mrs. J. Fred Pierson, Mrs. Herbert Satterlee, Mrs. George R. Boynton, Mrs. William G. Shaller, and Miss Elizabeth Goldsmith.

All week there has been a large and smart attendance at the art exhibit, held at 677 Fifth Avenue, on behalf of the Sandoz Mission. Yesterday afternoon a reception and tea was held. On Tuesday the band from the New York Navy Yard is to play. Liberty bonds are also to be sold during the course of the exhibit, which is to have many attractive features every few days.

Mrs. Thomas Powell Fowler opened her house at 39 East Sixty-eighth Street last Wednesday for an entertainment in aid of the St. James School, Besao, Philippine Islands, which is in charge of Deaconess Hargreaves. Miss Ruth Draper appeared in monologues, and Miss Juliet Griffith and Mrs. B. Tappen Fairchild were heard.

The Imperial Order, Daughters of the British Empire, of which Mrs. J. Elliot Langstaff is President, is giving a bridge and dance at the Plaza on Monday evening, April 15. Proceeds will be used to carry on the philanthropic work of the organization. Mrs. John L. Esson of 30 Morningside Drive is receiving applications at $1.50 each.

The New York branch of the Needlework Guild of America has called a mass meeting, open to the public, for Monday afternoon, at the Cosmopolitan Club, when Section Presidents will make reports on the number of new members enrolled during the present drive for 100,000 new members by April 15.

Miss Grace Bigelow, President of the branch, will preside. Mrs. Truman H. Newberry, President of the national society, and Miss Lillian Wald of the Henry Street Settlement are to be among the speakers.

The drive, which aims to increase the membership throughout the United States to 2,000,000 new members, is looking to New York City to head the list of branches, which numbered 450 at the beginning of the drive last Monday, and which it is expected will increase to 2,000 by April 15. To this end Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Honorary President, has sent out 22,250 letters, under her personal signature, in which she points out the intensified need for home charities due to the drain on sympathy and purse for the suffering nations abroad, and states that one society alone has appealed to the guild for 25,000 garments to meet its requirements for 1918.

"The high cost of food," says Mrs. Roosevelt, "leaves little for clothing; the high cost of fuel makes warm clothing more necessary than ever; illness from lack of food and fuel can be minimized if we provide warm clothing."

Both Mrs. Newberry and Mrs. Roosevelt have each five members of their families at the front—Mrs. Roosevelt's four sons and her son-in-law, Dr. Richard Derby, are now in France. Mrs. Newberry's husband is Lieutenant Commander of the 3d Naval District; her twin sons, Barnes and Phelps, are ensigns in the navy. Her brother and son-in-law are also in service.

On Thursday afternoon, April 18, at the Cort Theatre there will be a performance of a war play called "The Spirit of Poland," by the "Friends of Poland" Dramatic Society of Boston, Mass., which was organized by Antoinette Szumowska Adamowska. Her daughter, Miss Helena Adamowska, will play the leading part, supported by young women friends and Harvard men.

Among the New York patronesses actively interested in the success of this war play, which met with so much favor in and near Boston, are Mme. Sembrich, Mme. Paderewski, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Miss Eleanor Blodgett, Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Mrs. Edward De Coppet, Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler, Mrs. Schirmer, Mrs. Herbert Satterlee, Mrs. H. Fairfield Osborn, Mrs. C. Lorillard Spencer, Mrs. Grenville Kane, Mrs. Francis Dana Winslow, Mrs. William Pierson Hamilton, Mrs. Henry Holt, Mrs. Paul D. Cravath, and Mrs. James Speyer.

The proceeds will be sent to Miss Alma Tadema in London for the destitute children of Poland in the orphanages in England, Holland, and Switzerland. Tickets may be obtained from Mme. Antoinette Adamowska, Room 1005, Times Building.

Twenty members form the officers and Bench Show Committee of the dog show to be held at the 71st Regiment Armory on Saturday, April 20, in aid of St. Mary's Free Hospital for Children, which promises to be the most successful and largest one-day exhibition of the sort ever held in New York.

The officers of the Ladies' Charity Show Club are Mrs. Haley Fiske, President; Mrs. Frederick Edey and Mrs. J. Macy Willets, Vice Presidents; Mrs. Carl Ehlermann, Jr., Secretary; Mrs. R. K. Lincoln, Treasurer. Friends of the Children's Hospital have donated over $1,000 as cash prizes, to supplement the usual awards of ribbons and cups.

The concert and dance, to be held on Saturday evening in the grand ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, when the combined musical clubs of Yale, Princeton, and Harvard Universities, and the operatic stars, Miss Anna Fitziu and Mme. Frances Alda, will be the principal attraction, promises to be one of the successful events of the Spring.

A bazaar for the benefit of the Holland-American Homes for Belgian Orphans will be held in the assembly room of the Waldorf-Astoria on Tuesday and Wednesday. Miss H. A. C. Van der Flier, daughter of the Court Chaplain of Holland, is here by authority of King Albert of Belgium to raise money for this project, which includes the building of a model American village. Many etchings and paintings by Belgian and Dutch masters, old Holland silverware, and a valuable assortment of works of art and interest will be shown at the bazaar. The American committee in charge of the work is headed by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Coleman du Pont, Mrs. Charles P. Alexander, Edward W. Bok, Miss C. B. Spence, and many others who are prominent and active in its success.

For the maintenance of two ambulances, presented by the de Florez Fund to the Hospital Chir Saint Paul in France, a descriptive talk will be given at the Plaza this evening at 9 o'clock by C. de Florez. There will be an introductory address by Frederick R. Coudert. The tickets are $3 each, and are on sale at the Plaza.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have returned to the Ritz-Carlton Hotel from a brief farewell visit to Washington, D. C., during which they were the guests of Lord and Lady Reading at luncheon in the British Embassy. Last week Lord and Lady Aberdeen addressed the noonday meeting, held by the Mayor's Committee on National Defense each day at City Hall Park. They will sail very shortly, as their mission in this country, pertaining to the Child Welfare in Ireland, is completed.

Mrs. George Thompson gave an informal tea last week at her residence, 162 East 61st Street, and many came to greet her daughter, Miss Zilleh T. Thompson, who has been a shut-in since last December, when she was seriously injured in a crowded elevated train. Miss Thompson was one of the graceful dancers of the season two Winters ago, when she came out, but now she walks with a cane.

The Amateur Comedy Club will present "The Three Hats" at the Central Branch, Y. W. C. A., 610 Lexington Avenue, on the evening of April 25, for the benefit of the war work of the Needle Workshop of the association, located at 14 West Forty-fifth Street.

HOW VIVISECTION SAVES SOLDIERS

Importance of Continued "Christian Duty Toward Animals, Fellowmen and Toward God."

By PROFESSOR A. J. GOLDFARB, Department of Biology, College of the City of New York.

TO all who are misled by a false rhetoric or insidious argumentation, to those who may be ignorant of well established facts, to "the families and friends of our heroic troops, and to the common sense of the American people" this appeal is made by Major W. W. Keen, Emeritus Professor of Surgery of the Jefferson Medical College, and Major in the Medical Reserve Corps of the U. S. Army.

The appeal—which I am embodying in a short statement—is made to all to help our loyal troops by putting no unnecessary and harmful restrictions upon those who are devoting their lives to the amelioration of pain and suffering and to the reduction of preventable death—that is for continued animal experimentation as a means, and the best means so far devised by man, for determining the cause and the remedy of the manifold new medical and surgical problems that the war has made known to us.

What have animal experiments done to relieve widespread suffering and death in the past? Let us take a few examples such as typhoid, smallpox, tetanus.

In the civil war there were 79,462 cases of typhoid and 29,336 deaths. In the Boer war there were 58,000 cases and 8,000 deaths. Over one-third of the deaths were due to typhoid. In the Spanish-American war our army numbered 107,973 and there were 20,738 cases of typhoid and 1,580 deaths due to this disease. Every fifth soldier was ill of typhoid; 86 per cent. of the deaths were due to typhoid.

After the Spanish-American war anti-typhoid vaccine as determined by animal experimentation, was given to our soldiers, though not compulsory. Note the immense drop in the disease:

Year.	Number Cases.	Deaths.	Year.	Number Cases.	Deaths.
1906	210	12	1908	136	11
1907	124	7	1909	173	16

In 1911 anti-typhoid vaccination was made compulsory and note the further drop in this disease:

Year.	Number Cases.	Deaths.	Year.	Number Cases.	Deaths.
1911	70	8	1914	7	3
1913	4	..

The same sharp drop occurred in the navy.

In our last fracas with bands of Mexicans only one man (a civilian and unvaccinated) out of 20,000 men fell ill with the disease.

What is the situation in our armies at the front today? Of the English forces, which number approximately 5,000,000 men, 4,571 cases of the various types of typhoid occurred. It must be remembered that about 90 per cent. of the men are vaccinated. If the entire British Army were without vaccination, and the same morbidity occurred as in our Spanish-American war, instead of 4,571 cases there would be 1,000,000 men sick with typhoid. Furthermore, whereas 23.5 per cent. of the cases were fatal then, only 4.7 per cent. of the cases are fatal today. For every six men whose bowels were perforated by the disease among the unvaccinated group there is but one man in the vaccinated group.

In the United States Army between Sept. 17 and Jan. 18 of last year, i. e., one month longer than the war with Spain, there were 742,626 men in the various camps and cantonments. There were only 110 cases of all kinds of typhoid. Without anti-typhoid vaccination, i. e., with the morbidity of the period just before vaccines were used, there would have been 144,506 of our sons and brothers down with this dread disease.

Let us take another example—the once-feared smallpox. Whereas formerly villages and counties were decimated, friend fled from friend, children shunned their parents with a haunting fear, today, thanks to vaccine, resulting from animal experimentation, the disease is in all civilized communities practically nonexistent.

In spite of these demonstrable facts one will hear ignorant or malicious folk tell you that the vaccine is the cause of the smallpox. In the United States Army, where every man is vaccinated against smallpox, there is no instance of the disease contracted by vaccination. In the Philippines 8,000,000 people were vaccinated under the auspices of the United States Medical Corps, and not one of these contracted the disease. Prior to this campaign, however, there were 6,000 deaths by smallpox every year in and near Manila alone. There were every year in this region 25,000 cases of smallpox. In the twelve months after vaccination there was not one death due to smallpox.

Is it necessary to adduce other facts and figures to show how unwarranted is the statement that the vaccine is responsible for the disease?

Let us take another example. In tetanus not the muscles of the jaw alone are gripped but the muscles all over the body are in cramps ten or twenty times more severe, cramps so horrible that in the worst cases the muscles of the trunk arch the body like a bridge, and only the heels and the head touch the bed.

"Never shall I forget," writes Professor Keen, "a fine young soldier during the civil war who soon after Gettysburg manifested the disease in all its dreadful horror. His body was arched as I have described it. When at intervals he lay relaxed a heavy footstep in the ward or a bang of a door would cause the most frightful spasm all over his body and he hissed his pitiful groans between tightly clenched teeth. The ward was emptied. A half-moon pad was hung between the two door knobs to prevent any banging; even the sentry, pacing his monotonous steps just outside the ward, had to be removed beyond earshot. * * * The spasms became more and more severe, the intervals shorter and shorter; it did not need even a footfall now to produce the spontaneous cramps, until finally a cruelly merciful attack seized upon the muscles of the throat, and then his body was relaxed once more and forever. He had been choked to death.

"Do you wonder at the joy unspeakable which we surgeons have felt of late years as we have conquered this fearful dragon?"

In the civil war it killed 90 per cent. of the patients attacked. In the present war "tetanus has been wiped off the slate" wherever the wounded can be brought for treatment in sufficient time.

One of the most horrible diseases at the front today is gas gangrene. The bacteria which are carried into the wound multiply with incredible speed, and as they multiply they liberate a gas. Gas has been known to occur within five hours after injury. An entire limb may become gangrenous, necessitating complete amputation, within sixteen hours after injury.

"Now, your son in France runs a very serious risk of becoming infected with this deadly germ. Would you be willing positively to forbid any experimentation on animals which could teach us how to recognize this infection as early as possible? Would you forbid any experimentation that might teach us how to conquer or, better still, to prevent this virulent infection and save his life? Which would you prefer should suffer, and very possibly die, a few minor animals or your son? If a horse or a dog or even a tiny mouse can help in this sacred crusade for liberty and civilization, even if it suffers and dies, is it not a worthy sacrifice? Should they be spared and our own kith and kin give up their lives?"

As a result of animal experimentation in this country a serum has been perfected which it seems very probable, indeed, will hereafter prevent this very dreadful disease.

Is it necessary to cite other examples? Need one recall that compound fracture of the bones meant death in 66 per cent. of the cases before Lister's day? Major operations meant almost certain death. These are now performed by the tens of thousands with 1, 2, or 3 per cent. fatalities.

Professor Keen sums up his appeal with the remark: "I regard experimental research in medicine as a medical, a moral and Christian duty toward animals, toward my fellow-man and toward God." * * * "And what have the anti-vivisectionists done for animals and man? In animals? Absolutely nothing.

"In spite of the enormous ravages of animal diseases causing enormous suffering to animals and costing this country $215,000,000 every year, not a single disease has had its ravages diminished or abolished as a result of anything that they have done. But medical research is saving every year thousands of animals from anthrax, hog cholera, chicken cholera, Texas fever, and other diseases.

"In human beings? Absolutely nothing. I do not know a single disease of human beings which has had its ravages checked, abated, or abolished by any work ever done by the anti-vivisectionists. The only thing they have done has been to throw as many obstacles as possible in the path of those who are striving to benefit both animals and men."

PHILOSOPHY OF GLADNESS.

It's Fine, but It's Difficult to Live Up to It.

The party who tries to carry out the "why worry" philosophy might get along nicely if there were not so many people in the world who band him something to worry about. Did you ever notice how many people carry mental sandpaper around with them? One who awakens to the brightness and joy of life and the inutility of worry is likely to get a setback the first hour of conversion.

Father was on the "don't worry" wagon just one day, and fell off when he met a wild and untamed street car conductor who wouldn't recognize his transfer. Mother read "Pollyanna" and was converted to the philosophy of Gladness, but she got little further than the frozen-smile stage. Willie came home from school the same afternoon with a bevy of classmates, and they had a rough house on her new rugs, and mother swept the whole party out with a broom; when she got the smile straightened out again, father came home and asked her what in time she was grinning at. Oh, its hard work, this ignoring of the obvious!

There is a party within my daily vision who has progressed just far enough in the philosophy of Gladness to wear a waxen smile, but his soul remains arid and unawakened; you couldn't pry him away from two bits with a chisel. These frozen-faced boys are rather hurting the cult; there is such a temptation to the irritable to hit them with a custard pie, or something.

However, I am going to try this doctrine of Gladness as soon as they get the taxes down, end the war, quit making civic improvements in my district, and clear the neighborhood of cats. I don't want to fall down on it; if I can get the track cleared of the usual and regular obstacles to good humor I might be pretty happy for perhaps two or three days.—G. M. F. in Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

CONDENSED SPEECH.

Little Girl Makes Short Work of Her Uncle's Lesson.

Speaking at a dinner, Senator William A. Smith of Michigan, referred to the grammatical misplays that one occasionally makes, and fittingly recalled this incident:

Uncle Smith was walking along the street one afternoon and, meeting his little 8-year-old niece, he asked her if she were going on a picnic with her school fellows the following day.

"No, uncle," answered the little girl, "I ain't going."

"You mustn't say 'I ain't going,' Bessie," returned the uncle. "You should say 'I am not going,'" and then continued with this lesson in grammar. "'You are not going. He is not going. They are not going.' Now, can you say all that?"

"Yes, Sir," was the ready rejoinder of Bessie. "There ain't nobody going."—Philadelphia Evening Telegraph.

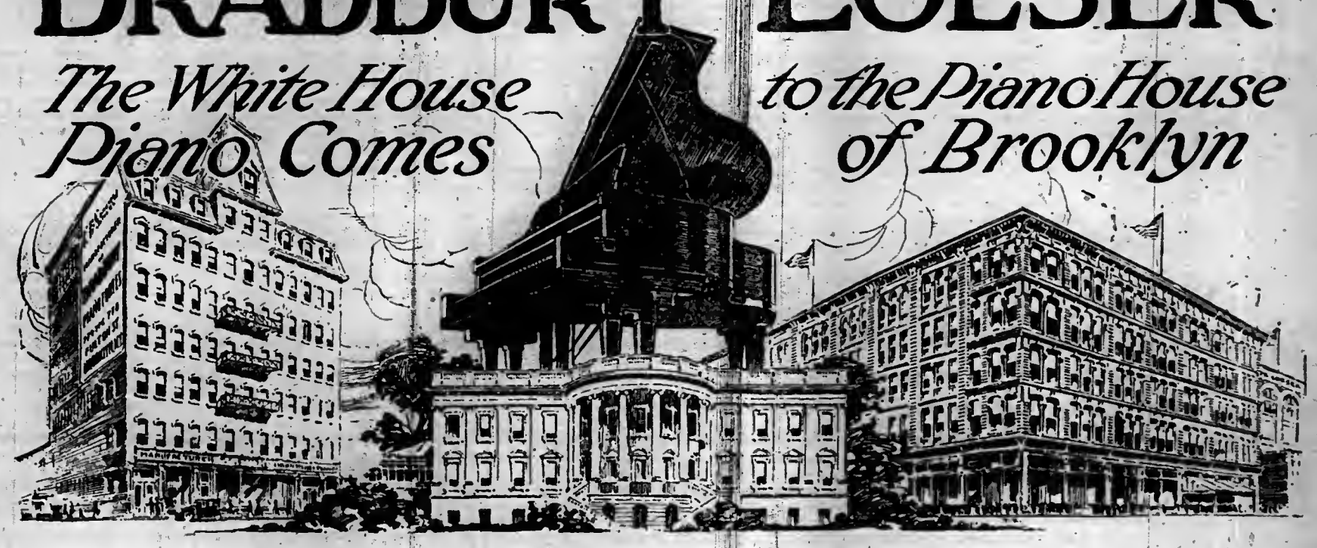
BRADBURY-LOESER

The White House Piano Comes to the Piano House of Brooklyn



Announcing the Taking Over of the Bradbury Retail Business in Brooklyn by Loeser's and

A $75,000 Dispersal of the Bradbury Stock of Pianos and Player-pianos

THIS IS IMPORTANT NEWS for the people of Brooklyn. Important, because it concerns one of the greatest Piano events of recent years—one of the greatest opportunities that have come to this community to buy a widely known instrument much below its price.

Important, also, because it concerns Bradbury and Webster Pianos—Pianos which have been closely associated with Brooklyn's cultural growth and development, which have held a place unique in Brooklyn's affections for the past half-century or more.

Bradbury instruments have been made in Brooklyn ever since 1854. They have been an influence for happiness and culture in Brooklyn schools and churches over sixty years. They have brought honor to Brooklyn in the private reception room of the White House itself, from the time it was the home of General Grant to the present occupancy of our War President.

Bradbury and Webster Pianos and Player-pianos Henceforth at Loeser's Exclusively in Brooklyn

Because of the excelling qualities that have made the Bradbury the "White House Piano," that have placed it in the home of our Presidents and in thousands of fine homes throughout the country, the Bradbury Piano business has grown, until now, to concentrate more effectively on the wholesale production of Pianos and Players, the Bradbury Company has decided to place the retail distribution of its instruments hereabout in the hands of the Piano House of Brooklyn.

With the sole right to sell Bradbury instruments in the territory of Brooklyn and Long Island, we have also acquired the entire stock of the Bradbury Piano Company, every instrument in the factory and warerooms at 774-776-778 Fulton Street.

Over 200 Instruments : New and Used
To Be Sold at Prices Phenomenally Low

—some for as much as $300 less than the original Bradbury price. Most of these are new, some almost new and others used Pianos of excellent names. But all are being worked on day and night; repaired, revarnished, tuned, polished as seems needed—placed in first-class condition within and without, so that they may be, in every respect, representative when offered of LOESER quality.

Each instrument will be offered under FULL LOESER GUARANTEE; each will represent such a value as has never been offered in Bradbury Pianos; each will show the lowest price, perhaps, at which Bradbury instruments have ever sold since the first Bradbury Piano was made.

These Will Be Ready Tomorrow at the Bradbury Warerooms 774-776-778 Fulton St., near Adelphi :

CHÉRADAME BLAMES ALLIES FOR CRISIS ON WEST FRONT

Their Neglect of Other Theatres of War Has Enabled Germany to Concentrate for Decisive Blow, Says Man Who Exposed Pan-German Machinations.

(Portions of an Article in the April Issue of The Atlantic Monthly.)

By ANDRÉ CHÉRADAME,

Author of "The Pan-German Plot Unmasked," etc.

IT is of supreme importance for Americans to understand quite clearly the fundamental cause of the strategic errors of the Entente. Indeed such a clear understanding is the only means by which the United States can avoid sacrifices in men and money infinitely greater than necessary. I shall, therefore, treat this part of my subject by appealing to the unmitigated truth, without regard for other considerations.

I propose to show that as a matter of fact all the strategic errors of the Entente are derived from this—that the western front has been regarded as the most important front. The first source of this idea is the incredible but undoubted ignorance of the Pan Germanist scheme on the part of the leaders of the Entente. This ignorance is a phenomenon which I act down, but which I cannot explain.

This ignorance has had this result, that the Allies have failed to realize that Germany made war, before all else, to make the Hamburg-Persian Gulf plan an accomplished fact, and that that achievement, by reason of its inevitable consequences, would suffice to assure Germany of the dominion of the world. It is this failure to grasp the real war aim pursued by Germany which explains why the supreme importance of the Danube front, which was the key of the war, which the Allies had in their possession, and which it was relatively easy for them to retain, did not receive serious attention while it was time.

"The theory that the western front is all important has been repeatedly laid down by Colonel Repington, the military critic of The London Times (now of The Morning Post.)

Finding myself compelled, in order to make more clear my indispensable demonstration, to show how far Colonel Repington has gone astray, and what infinite harm his errors have done to the cause of the Entente by reason of the mighty influence of The Times, which is almost a national organ, I conceive that no sinister motive can be attributed to me if I make, by way of preamble, this statement. I was one of the first Frenchman who favored the Franco-British rapprochement, at a time when public opinion in my country was opposed to that policy. To the powerful Times, which has many a time assisted me in propagating my ideas, I am most grateful. To me personally, therefore, it is really distressing to take issue with one of its chief collaborators. But according to my honest belief Colonel Repington, because of the extraordinary influence of the organ in which he writes, has been instrumental in leading the Allies to commit errors in strategy which have cost millions of men and endangered the issue of the war. I feel, therefore, in duty bound to call the attention of the Allies to the immense amount of harm done by Colonel Repington. His constantly repeated forecasts have this characteristic in common, that for three years and a half they have been most strikingly falsified by events.

But the Repington peril still exists. In fact even today a large number of allied newspapers continue to reproduce his forecasts, because they appear in The Times, as coming from one having authority, although any sort of credit should long ago have been denied to him.

The Allies having followed Colonel Repington's advice and sent no troops to the Danube, the attack on Serbia was begun in October, 1915. At that time energetic action on the part of the Allies in the way of sending to Serbia, by way of Saloniki and by the Santi Quarante route, sufficient reinforcements might still have saved the greater part of Serbia and thus have maintained the Allies in a position to recover the Danube front. Thereupon Colonel Repington reiterated with singular vigor his theory of the main front as opposed to the dispatch of allied troops to the rescue of Serbia.

"No new units," he said, "have made their appearance in the east or the west for several months. It may well be true, therefore, that Germany has not the necessary men to create such units. Under these conditions our manifest duty is to persevere on the main front—that is, in France and Flanders. That is where the final decision will be had, and nothing on earth would justify us in withdrawing troops from there. We must send thither all the men and all the munitions at our disposal, in order to kill the greatest possible number of Germans.

"The Germans are still capable of holding out against Russia, and of massing more troops against us. What a plight we should find ourselves in if, at such a time, our forces in the western theatre had been reduced! The responsibility would fall, not on the army, which has fought so superbly, but on those who have the supreme management of the war."

These vigorous arguments had a tremendous influence on British public opinion, and Serbia was abandoned to her fate. Furthermore still as a result of his theory of the main front, Colonel Repington afterward, whenever he had a chance, made the bitterest opposition to the dispatch of the allied expeditionary force to the Balkans. As he found important supporters in France the army at Saloniki is still without sufficient means of action.

However that may be, Colonel Repington's campaign in support of his disastrous theory that the western front is the most important one has produced such far-reaching effects that it has influenced men occupying very high official positions. For example, early in October, 1917, General Smuts, a Boer officer, unquestionably of great valor, but, by reason of his foreign birth, having never been in a position to study the vast complexities of the European war, in a speech at a luncheon given by the President of the Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, a speech of special importance because of his membership in the British War Cabinet, declared:

"The Central allies are beaten everywhere, are retreating everywhere, except in Russia. * * * To whip Germany we need not go as far as the Rhine. To effect this purpose one strip of land is as good as another, so long as the Germans choose to occupy it; and, take my word for it, long before we have reached the Rhine Germany will sue for peace. * * * Our military superiority on the western front is no longer open to the slightest question. * * * If we turn to the Italian front, can we entertain any doubt, after the great victories of the Italian Army, that our allies on that front have obtained a complete preponderance over the Germans?"

A few days later events proved the value of these assertions. As General Smuts had several times announced that Germany was virtually whipped, The Weekly Dispatch did not hesitate to make the following truly stupefying comment on these statements:

"When so circumspect a soldier and statesman as General Smuts declares that we have won the war we can assume that there are good and sufficient reasons why so bold an assertion proves that we have won it."

Comments of this description unfortunately do not stand alone. For three years and a half a number of allied newspapers have reproduced declarations of men of more or less prominence, about as valuable as those of General Smuts, as being undeniable truths.

The aberration caused in numerous controlling councils of the Allies by the theory of the western as the principal front has gone so far that, even after the Italian catastrophe, when Germany was already master of three-fourths of Europe, Major Sir Philip Sassoon, M. P., private secretary to Sir Douglas Haig, in a letter to his constituents, reiterated this theory, declaring that the outstanding facts of the war are not the momentary collapse of Russia and the invasion of Italy, but the steady, inexorable advance of the British armies in Flanders, which neither the enemy nor the weather conditions can check. At that time Major Sassoon believed that the British advance on Cambrai would prove to be irresistible and continuous. A few days later the German counter attack, and the serious British losses which resulted from it, gave the lie once more to forecasts of this sort.

On the occasion of Major Sassoon's amazing letter, the Socialist journal L'Humanité, which often indulges in Utopian conceits, published so accurate a summary of the doctrine of the principal front at the end of 1917 that I deem it my duty to quote it.

"'Don't be alarmed,' say the partisans of Occidentalism, or Repingtonians, 'by the confusion and backsliding of Russia. Don't ascribe too much importance to the invasion of Northern Italy, Serbia, Rumania—there is no use in stopping to talk about them. All this is of no account. The absolute definitive victory we shall win on the western front, or, more precisely, on the British front. The irresistible advance of the British army in Flanders will give it to us. The occupation by the enemy of Poland, Lithuania, and Courland, of Wallachia and Venetia; Riga captured, Venice within cannon shot of the Austro-German lines—all this is of no account in comparison with the taking of Passchendaele, (a small village in Flanders.) Why unify the conduct of operations, when there is but one operation of any importance?' Such is the doctrine. It has never varied."

As for the reasons given to justify this theory of the principal front by its partisans, they are all summed up in this statement, which, however, has never been supported by any technical evidence: "This is a war of attrition. As the resources of the Allies are inexhaustible, they can certainly hold out much longer than the Germans, who are the besieged party. We have only to establish ourselves more and more strongly on the western front. As the Germans cannot remain in a state of war indefinitely, they will be compelled to attack us. Consequently the Kaiser's troops will have, perforce, to come and be killed on the western front. It is a mathematical certainty, therefore, that a time will come when we shall have inflicted upon Germany losses in many power so prodigious that, finding herself to be bled white, she will sue for a peace every conditinn of which we shall be in a position to impose upon her. At that moment we shall be completely victorious without having been compelled to cross the Rhine, as we have many times declared."

Such is, in reality, incredible as it may appear, the ominously puerile and prodigiously rudimentary reasoning which has been the sole basis of the management by the Allies of this complex, world-embracing war; whereas the Germans in carrying it on act consistently, according to some plan or other, but always one that has been studied in every part of the universe without exception. In truth, this theory by which the western front is regarded as the principal one does not deserve even to be considered as a strategic plan at all, for it rests upon an accumulation of such gigantic blunders that it would seem impossible that they could have been committed, were we not constrained to admit their reality by facts that are only too manifest.

Let us remark, first of all, that this theory is strictly opposed to the fundamental principle of warfare as established by military history from its most distant origins. This immutable principle may be stated thus: While supporting one's allies to the utmost, to carry the war into the enemy's country at the weakest spot with superior forces. Now, the theory that we are considering has had the following results:

1. It has prevented the Allies from carrying the war into the enemy's country and has confined the most frightful struggle in history to the richest and most densely populated territory of Belgium and France.

2. It has compelled the Allies to abandon the hope of striking their enemy at his weakest point, which was beyond question the southern line of Hungary.

3. It has led the Allies to concentrate their most powerful forces against the strongest portions of the German front, where the German Staff could most easily manage the most stubborn defense, by virtue of the vast network of railways that it controls in the west.

4. It has abandoned successively to the Pan Germanist Moloch such admirable, gallant, and loyal allies as the unhappy Serbs and Rumanians. Such abandonment not only was an unpardonable moral error on the part of the allied leaders, but also consummated the substantial strategic blunder of the Entente. For, by an extraordinary chance the territories of Montenegro, Serbia, and Rumania were, and still are, strategically considered, the key of the world war, because they form the natural Danube front, the mere possession of which by the Allies deprived Austria and Germany of the aid of the Bulgarian and Turkish effectives, and of the resources of the Orient, without which it could not have continued the war. Therefore, by supporting with vigor their small Balkan allies, the great Allies would not only have fulfilled their moral duty, but would also have forwarded their essential strategic interests, and the war would long since have ended victoriously.

Now, the sole obstacle to this logical development of the military efforts of the Allies has been the theory that the western front is the principal front. Consider the huge blunders, even of a strictly military description, which have resulted from this disastrous theory, and one can readily understand that it makes no account of the strategy of the political sciences, the existence of which is not suspected even at the present moment by the supporters of that theory. Let us note once more that it is based by them upon a long succession of material misconceptions. Events have proved that Colonel Repington's reckoning of the German reserves was erroneous. Furthermore, in his calculation of the enemy's forces, Colonel Repington has never dealt seriously with the Austro-Hungarian, Bulgarian, and Turkish effectives, which, however, do exist and whose support enable Austria and Germany to keep the field.

Failing to take into the account the total military effectives of Pan Germany, Colonel Repington has neglected also to consider the resources in supplies and raw material of this vast territory. But these resources, because of the effect of the submarine campaign, are to all intent greater for the boches—or, at all events, more readily accessible and transportable—than the resources of the western Allies, who cannot live now without America and Australia; that is to say, without articles of prime necessity brought from a great distance by slow, infinitely burdensome, and uncertain means of transport.

Lastly, if it had been true that Austria and Germany, blockaded by land—the Allies being on the Danube front—would have been in effect a besieged fortress inevitably doomed to capitulate by reason of the insufficiency of food supplies—because, in fact, the resources of Austria and Germany alone would have been insufficient for its population—on the other hand, it was utterly absurd to regard Austria and Germany augmented by the Balkans and Turkey, (that is to say, Pan Germany) as a fortress susceptible of being reduced by starvation.

Pan Germany today is in very truth a fortress in the sense that it is unfreied by continuous fortified fronts; but it is nonsense to liken Pan Germany to a fortress having necessarily to surrender because of famine, when, by virtue of its geographic immensity, including the vast exploitable territories of the Balkans and Turkey, it affords the most diverse products of the soil. And the latent resources of Pan Germany are immeasurably increased now that the whole of European and Asiatic Russia is open to it.

To sum up: The theory that the western front is the principal one is the capital strategic blunder of all the allied leaders, and it explains all their other blunders. The facts are at hand to prove that it was impossible to conceive of any general plan for the conduct of the war by the Allies which would have made it easier for the German General Staff to carry out the Pan Germanist scheme. For, from this point of view, the theory has had the following further results:

1. It has allowed Germany to lay hold freely of the territories necessary for the creation of Pan Germany.

2. It has given her all the time that she required so to organize Pan Germany that its military strength should bring about one of its first effects—the collapse of Russia.

3. It has confirmed Germany in the possession of all the sources of troops, supplies, and raw materials existing in the Balkans and Asiatic Turkey.

4. On the other hand, it has deprived the Allies of the sources of strategic strength and of effectives represented by the Balkans and Russia, and has compelled them to seek beyond the Atlantic those things which are indispensable for their subsistence.

5. It has enabled the German General Staff to concentrate all the disposable effectives of Pan Germany on the western front, which concentration was impossible so long as the Allies were formidable enough in the east.

Doubtless it is no longer possible to deny to the western front the title of principal front; but only because there is practically no other now. Clearly it is the principal one for the Germans, because they can beyond question bring about a definitive decision there. But it is of the first importance for Americans to realize fully that the Allies cannot possibly indulge the same certainty. Henceforth the western front is assuredly not the principal one for the Allies, except so far as it is a question, first of all, of not being hopelessly defeated there.

Thus the first effort of the Allies must be to do their utmost not to be crushed in the west. But will all the successes that they may be able to win in the west suffice to give them the victory—that is to say, to force Germany to abandon her grip on Central Europe and the Balkans; in other words, on the instruments of universal domination? Of course, no one could undertake to say absolutely that it will not be so, but the chances of such a result are

A BIG GERMAN HOAX

American "Experts" Helped Picture Fatherland as Workingmen's Paradise, with Model Homes, High Wages, Short Hours, and Social Insurance.

By RALPH M. EASLEY,
Chairman Executive Council of the National Civic Federation.

WHILE Germany was preparing armies and manufacturing cannon for her intended onslaught for world dominion she was engaged at the same time in a "peaceful offensive" designed to win from America an overwhelming admiration for what the paternal Prussian autocracy had accomplished for the welfare of the German masses.

Of the various kinds of German propaganda, which have been sprung upon the world at a cost of millions of dollars, none was so successful as that which extolled the superior social and economic conditions of the German Empire. It served to cloak the sinister purposes of the Imperial German Government. It enlisted the regard of the working classes and intellectuals of other nations. It caused many people, after the outbreak of the war, to temporize for Germany, and served to allay the righteous indignation and horror aroused by the bestial atrocities of her military hordes.

But what are the facts back of these claims for superior working, social, and economic conditions in Germany? The League for National Unity has undertaken to assemble the facts regarding these conditions up to the outbreak of the war. These facts, drawn from official German documents and other authoritative sources, have been available at any time in our public libraries to the "social reformers" who have so misled the American people on these matters. They are now being published in weekly serials in hundreds of newspapers. The studies were prepared for the league by Gustavus A. Myers, the well-known research expert and writer. They deal with the following topics:

Oppression of the farmers.
Underpaid workers.
Industrial enslavement of women and children.
Shocking housing conditions.
Chronic underfeeding and great infant mortality.
The large extent of pauperism.
Counterfeit social insurance.

The facts and figures quoted by me in this article are based on Mr. Myers's report. Now let us see what they reveal:

That conditions under which workers and farmers in Germany lived and worked were intolerable in the extreme; that women and children worked like beasts of burden on farms and in the cities; that sweatshops abounded; that the majority of workers lived in foul, wretched tenements; that they suffered from lack of food and fuel, and labored for stretches of hours unparalleled in other countries for starvation wages. As for the so-called social insurance laws, what did they amount to? According to the Amtliche Nachrichten des Reichs-Versicherung-Amt, Berlin, the average invalidity pension in 1913 was $46.51 a year—less than $1 a week. The average sickness pension was $48.45 a year—also less than $1 a week. The average old-age pension was $59.75 a year—about 76 cents a week. The average widow's and widower's pension was $18.49 a year—about 35 cents a week. The average widow's sickness pension was $15.50 a year, and the average orphan's pension $19.07 a year. These were the pensions in a country where the poorest paid adult living in the lowest possible scale, needed at least $140 to $155 a year for the cost of the barest subsistence.

The American press agents of Teutonic superiority have extolled the various social reform measures, particularly the provisions for giving financial credit to small farmers. In the United States the Federal Farm Loan act operates to the benefit of small farmers who actually till the soil, and eliminates absentee landlords. Loans from $100 to $10,000 are made on land security and improvements, from five to forty years, repayable on easy terms and at a low rate of interest. From the time the Federal Farm Loan act was put into operation up to Dec. 1, 1917, in less than six months, $39,081,000 was loaned. Yet these very American farmers have been told that the German Government is much more generous. But is this so?

Dr. Kapp-Konigsberg, General Director of the Prussian Landschaftleo—the Mutual Farm Loan Associations—testifying before a visiting commission in 912, admitted that the systems of loans on landed property had benefited chiefly the landowning aristocracy.

"Of the estates," he testified, "which exceed 100 hectares (a hectare is not quite 2½ acres) 66.3 per cent. have availed themselves of landschaft loans; the corresponding proportion in the case of peasant holdings is only 13.5 per cent."

The meaning of this is clear when it is explained that in Germany 2,084,000 farm holdings are under 1¼ acres, 1,204,440 farm) holdings are from 1¼ to 5 acres, 1,005,277 farm holdings from 5 to 12½ acres, and 1,067,339 farm holdings from 12½ to 50 acres. The Landwirtschaftliche Betriebsstatistik, Part 2-B, published by the Imperial Statistical Office, Berlin, 1912, further shows that while the millions of peasant farmers have only tiny farms, 23,566 Junkers—feudal barons or magnate farmers—own nearly 25,000,000 acres, embraced in estates of 250 to 500 acres and more. Of the farms in Germany, 36.3 per cent. are under 1¼ acres, 22.6 per cent. 1¼ to 5 acres, 17.5 per cent. 5 to 12 acres, 18.6 per cent. 12½ to 50 acres, 4.6 per cent. 50 to 250 acres, 0.2 per cent. 250 to 500 acres, and 0.2 per cent. 500 acres and over.

It can therefore be seen what an insignificant proportion of the small farmers have received the aid of loans from these Mutual Farm Loan Associations. In their inception they were meant for the landed aristocrats, and have remained so.

Much praise has been accorded the annuity banks of Germany by infatuated admirers of the paternal Prussian system. To what extent have these banks benefited small farmers? They were established in 1850, and enlarged in functions later by legislation. They haved served, in the words of Dr. Augsbin of Berlin "in facilitating the redemption of old servitudes encumbering the lands of peasants, so as to enable the peasant farmer to buy off the feudal dues incumbering his land." These banks issue annuity bonds, guaranteed by the Prussian Government, which run from fifty to sixty years, and by 1909 the amount issued was more than 500,000,000 marks. Thus the peasants of Germany are compelled to pay off dues for feudal impositions of five centuries ago.

The vast proportion are so small that the farmers cannot afford machinery, and instead use the labor of women and children. Does one see women and children hitched with oxen and dogs, drawing plows and carts in the United States? "In Germany," reported F. J. H. von Engelken, (President of the Federal Farm Loan Bank of Columbia, S. C.,) member of a visiting American commission, "the greater proportion of the farm work is done by women. It is a common sight to see women hoeing or pitching hay or spreading manure." And what are the generous emoluments in prosperous, happy Germany? According to testimony given on farm wages in 1912 a woman farm laborer earns from 38 to 48 cents a day, and children over 12 years get 21 cents a day, without board. Male farm labor gets 72 cents a day.

The happy farmers of Germany! The demeaning caste system which sharply defines a peasant in Germany is surpassed in rigidity perhaps only in India. The German system is so arranged that the children of peasants must remain peasants; the education system is so devised that it confines the young to the caste of which they were born.

In the United States the ten-hour workday was established in 1840 and the eight-hour workday received Congressional sanction in 1889. Up to the very beginning of the war the general workday for highly skilled trades in Germany was fifty-seven to sixty hours a week and in other trades twelve to fourteen hours a day. The average usual hours for labor, according to the replies of German employers to the British Board of Trade Inquiry, in 1908 were: Fifty-four hours for compositors; 59 hours in the building trades; 59½ hours in the engineering trades. By comparison, hours of labor in Germany were 8 to 12 per cent. higher than in England and 10 to 34 per cent. higher than in the United States.

As for those reported high wages, we have the facts given by Dr. R. R. Kuczynski, director of the municipal statistical office of Schneneberg, who was commissioned by the German Imperial Treasury Department to prepare a memorial. In 1907 the following wages prevailed in the prosperous Fatherland:

Miners, hard coal mines, an average of $334 a year.

Miners, soft coal mines, an average of $297 a year.

Workers in salt mines and works, an average of $300 a year.

Miners in copper mines, an average of $271 a year.

Miners in iron mines, an average of $266 a year.

Carpenters, $1.24 to $1.61 a day.

Plumbers, gas fitters, and steam fitters, $1.13 to $1.39 a day.

Stonecutters, $1.62 to $1.72 a day.

Krupp plant, at Essen, average daily earnings, $1.27.

Journeymen printers, $6.55 to $7.44 a week.

Skilled State railway shopworkers, 86 cents to $1.02 a day.

Engineers, conductors, &c., State railway, 70 cents a day.

Artisans and mechanics, State railway, 98 cents to $1.08 a day.

Able-bodied seamen, Baltic and North Sea, average $15.18 a month.

This list includes skilled men only. Other kinds of workers in these different industries received, of course, much less than the skilled. An investigation at the same time made by the Federation of German Wnodworkers—an industry employing nearly 800,000 persons—disclosed that the average weekly labor hours of joiners, turners, brush and basket makers, wheelwrights, wooden-shoe makers, box, and toy makers were 57 hours.

The average weekly earnings of adult males were $5.09 a week.

According to a summary sent out by the German Imperial Statistical Office, the average earnings of men per day in certain important groups of industries were, in March, 1914:

Metal industry	$1.32
Engineering industry	1.28
Electrical industry	1.07
Paper industry	.93
Woodworking industry	1.01
Chemical industry	1.24
Stoneworking and pottery	1.07
Food, drink, and tobacco	1.36
Leather and rubber	1.20

In the textile industry wages were considerably lower than the low wages in other industries. An article in the Soziale Praxis of Berlin, Nov. 11, 1915, stated that in normal times weekly wages of from 7 to 10 marks ($1.67 to $2.38) for female workers and from 14 to 15 marks ($3.33 to $3.57) for male workers represented the average wages paid in some important textile districts in Germany.

How do these wages compare with the cost of living? The German Imperial Statistical Office in 1908 published a report of an investigation of the annual living expenses of 852 families, which placed the average annual expenditure per family at $531.70. Compare this with the average yearly earning of unskilled workmen, $310, and of skilled workmen, $373.

The German propaganda has aimed particularly at impressing the working classes of other lands with the purpose, as before pointed out, of weakening the allegiance of labor to their own Governments by making them believe workers were better off in Germany. Yet, in Germany, workers were not allowed to organize until long after unions were regarded as a fundamental right in other nations, and even today labor meetings are under direct bureaucratic surveillance. Few strikes have been successful in Germany.

In 1912, according to the German Statistical Year Book, 68.3 per cent., or more than two-thirds of the strikers, were compelled to return to work without meeting any success for their demands. In Saxony, where the general weekly wages of textile workers are from $1.30 to $2.12 a week, the workers in 1917 petitioned for the granting of a minimum wage scale. According to the Berlin Vorwärts of Aug. 21, 1917, General Groner, who was charged with the enforcement of the auxiliary service law, declared himself against the minimum wage—and that ended it. When the textile workers in Landeshut, Silesia, appealed to the War Arbitratinn Office at Posen, the presiding officer brusquely declared their wages were sufficiently high and threatened, if the mills closed, to send all males into the army or war material establishments and the females to farms in West Prussia. Such is "the industrial and social equality" exploited by the fatuous American propagandists of "superior German kultur."

How has the German worker, earning less than it costs to keep a family, managed to get along? An investigation made by the Imperial Statistical Office showed that, out of 852 families, in 278 the wife had to work out. In 1913 T. St. John Gaffney, United States Consul General at Dresden, reported to the United States Department of State that a full third of the economic labor of the German Empire was performed by women; that German statistics showed there were 9,500,000 wage-earning women in Germany, which meant that every second woman earned her own living. In 1910 Mr. Gaffney reported that the work day for women had been reduced from eleven hours to ten hours daily, and eight hours on Saturday. As Mr. Gaffney was such a pro-German that he had to be removed from office by our Government, it can be assumed that he did not exaggerate the bad conditions.

In 1905, according to an investigation made by the Berlin Chamber of Commerce, there were more than 100,000 sweatshops in Berlin alone, and 80 per cent. of the home workers were women. The Berlin Chamber of Commerce, investigating 2,051 municipal employes, found that the wives of 20.2 per cent. worked for money. The majority earned from 75 cents to $1.50 a week; only 25 received more than $2.50 a week.

That young girls worked in canning factories from thirteen to eighteen hours a day, and on Sundays for ten to more hours, was brought out by an investigation made by the German Factory Workers' Union in 1905. Their wages were 3 to 4½ cents an hour.

Women have been enlisted in the most strenuous trades. Their average daily earnings in March, 1914, according to a report of the German Statistical Office, were:

	Cents.
Metal industry	49
Engineering industry	55
Electrical industry	65
Paper industry	55
Woodworking industry	47
Chemical industry	57
Stoneworking and pottery industry	41
Food, drink, and tobacco industry	51
Leather and rubber industry	67

Before the war about 64,000 women and girls were employed in the metal trades, working from nine to ten hours a day. In the Soziale Praxis, Berlin, April 19, 1916, the Federation of German Metal Workers reported on the slavery of women in the metal trade:

"Even for men, and still more for women, work at flanging machines is too hard. * * * At these machines projectiles weighing from 22 to 82 pounds have to be lifted breast high and clamped to the bed; then unclamped and placed again on the floor. This entails a great physical strain. In order to earn a wage of 3 marks (71 cents) a day a woman must perform this operation 75 or even 100 times."

In 1914, before the war, 7,265 women and 51,290 children were employed in coal and salt mines. According to a report made in 1914 by United States Consul General Henry H. Morgan at Hamburg, the number of children employed in German mines, mills, and factories in 1911 was: Under 14 years, 7,434 boys and 5,970 girls; 11 to 16 years, 332,882 boys and 172,535 girls. Of 518,821 children employed, 40,799 boys and 1,003 girls worked in mines; 29,184 boys and 8,398 girls worked in stone and earth trades; 55,821 boys and 12,027 girls worked in metal trades, and 87,258 boys and 4,917 girls worked on machinery. Since the war women and children have been recruited by countless thousands to fill the places of men taken away as cannon fodder for the Kaiser's armies.

It is true that wages rose in Germany after the outbreak of the war. But how did they rise? According to the Bremer Bürger-Zeitung, by September, 1916, the prices of foodstuffs had increased 107 per cent. Against this the increase of wages was 46 per cent. for men and 54 per cent. for women.

But don't model homes for workingmen, quaint cottages, and miniature villas embowered with flowers compensate the workers for hardships? In January, 1913, an old bill demanding housing reform was again introduced in the Prussian Legislature. This bill set forth the deplorable conditions existing. Needless to say, the bill did not pass. The general mass of workers in Germany, skilled and unskilled, live in what are known as "barrack tenements." These tenements are built in a series of blocks, one row behind the other, the grim rows situated thirty to forty feet apart, and usually three to six stories in height. The gloom, the foulness, the lack of light and air, the sordid barrenness of the dark rooms, the lack of baths and heat were hidden by the meretricious overdecoration of the street exterior. American visitors, seeking proof of German superiority over the rest of the world, described only these gaudy exteriors. They did not tell that the hall baths in the rear were used by from eight to ten families, or that one-fourth of the families living in these small two and three room flats had to be lodgers in order to pay their rent.

The Berlin census of 1900 showed that 98.7 per cent. of the city's population lived in rented dwellings, mostly in these sordid barrack flats. Of 412,713 tenements in Berlin, 37,362 were of one room, 155,193 of two rooms, 143,744 of three rooms, and 56,197 of four rooms. Of 555,416 dwellings, housing a population of 1,996,904 persons in 1913, 40,660 consisted of one room, 186,756 of two rooms, 180,850 of three rooms, and 82,678 of four rooms. Of this number 34,508 had no kitchens. In 41,115 rooms were kept, and in 58,400 households transient night lodgers were taken in. Such are the happy homes of German workers! Mr. Gerard has stated that 55 per cent. of the families in Berlin live in one room. The prevailing "dwelling" for workers is a two-room flat, accommodating a family of four to six persons, and lodgers besides. For these "luxurious" quarters the German workingman, earning on an average $225 a year, has had to give up the equivalent of about fifty-six days' work a year for rent. Local taxes and State income taxes are not included.

Conditions similar to those in Berlin exist in all the great German cities. In Düsseldorf, much praised for its picturesque workingmen's homes, one-fourth of the workers in 1910 lived in one and two room flats. It has been said that Germany is without slums. What are perhaps the foulest slums in the world are found in Magdeburg and Danzig.

Against the intolerable housing conditions existing in Germany one might present the reforms in housing introduced in England, France, Belgium, and the United States. While much remains to be done in improvements in this country, the masses of American workers enjoy both working and living conditions infinitely superior to those of Germany. The amazing thing in all this is that the very "sociological experts" who have maligned everything American and belittled their own country have served as the most effective tools in propagating a belief in the superiority of that pompous fustian Kultur, which the German armies for nearly four years have endeavored with revolting bestiality to impose upon the world.

—Equip with Firestone Cord Tires. Since you are interested in personal saving as well as in the national thrift movement, this equipment means double value to you at this time.

Firestone Cord Tires represent an investment in greater tire wear, an investment in longer car life because of less vibration, hence fewer car repairs. The extra resiliency also means direct saving in fuel expense. And the dependability of Firestone Cord Tires gives the assurance of increased personal efficiency, conserved energy and time.

The Firestone process surrounds each individual cord with pure rubber so that no two cords may touch to cause friction. The thick, resilient, pure gum cushion, the strongly reinforced bead and sidewall, the thick tough tread, result in the very highest average of service. You add many miles to your present standard of "Most Miles per Dollar."

With Firestone Tubes, Tube Patches and other accessories in your equipment, you still further conserve and increase the life of your tires. You avoid delays, save many wasted hours and keep on going. See the Firestone dealer now.

exceedingly slender. The facts developed by the war, and the concordant precedents of all military history, enable one easily to convince one's self that it cannot be so. In fact, Germany not only is proceeding with the organization of Pan Germany, but she proposes also to exploit Russia, whence she will obtain immense supplemental resources. The means of resistance of the Germans on the western front must be regarded therefore as augmented in at least as great a measure as the means of offensive action which the Allies will be able to accumulate on that front. Consequently it is, to say the least, extremely doubtful whether the results on the western front can be decisive for the Allies.

Now, the mere fact that any doubt about it exists is enough to make it the duty of the Allies to take the precautions which wisdom enjoins against this new possible blunder, which this time would be beyond remedy. They must therefore understand that, to win the war, they must enter upon military operations elsewhere than on the western front.

In his reverberating speech at Paris on Nov. 12, 1917, Mr. Lloyd George performed the service of proclaiming aloud the military blunder of the Allies—which he justly characterized as "inconceivable"—in having fixed their attention solely on the western front. I quote the essential passages of this speech which particularly merit the notice of American readers. But I must call attention to the fact that, although Mr. Lloyd George did fully realize the vital nature of the Danube front from the military standpoint, he did not grasp its capital political importance, as is shown by his speech of Jan. 5, 1918, in which he sanctions the maintenance of the integrity of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

"There is one feature of this war which makes it unique among all the innumerable wars of the past. It is a siege of nations. The Allies are blockading two huge empires. It would have been well for us if at all times we had thoroughly grasped that fact. In a siege, not only must every part of the line of circumvallation be strong enough to resist the strongest attack which the besieged can bring to bear upon it; more than that, the besieging army must be ready to strike at the weakest point of the enemy, wherever that may be. Have we done so? Look at the facts.

"The enemy was cut off by the allied navies from all the rich lands beyond the seas, whence he had been drawing enormous stores of food and material. On the east he was blockaded by Russia, on the west by the armies of France, Britain, and Italy. But the south, the important south, with its gateway to the east, was left to be held by the forces of a small country with half the population of Belgium, its armies exhausted by the struggles of three wars, and with two treacherous Kings behind, lying in wait for an opportunity to knife it when engaged in defending itself against a mightier foe.

"What was the result of this inconceivable blunder? What would any man whose mind was devoted to the examination of the whole, not merely to one part, of the great battlefield, have expected to happen? Exactly what did happen. While we were hammering with the whole of our might at the impenetrable barrier in the west, the Central Powers, feeling confident that we could not break through, threw their weight on that little country, crushed her resistance, opened the gate to the east, and unlocked great stores of corn, cattle, and minerals, yea, unlocked the door of hope—all essential to enable Germany to sustain her struggle.

"Without these additional stores Germany might have failed to support her armies at full strength. Hundreds of thousands of splendid fighting material were added to the armies which Germany can control—added to her and lost to us. Turkey, which at that time had nearly exhausted its resources for war, cut off from the only possible source of supply, was re-equipped and resuscitated, and became once more a formidable military power, whose activities absorbed hundreds of thousands of our best men in order to enable us at all to retain our prestige in the east. By this fatuity this terrible war was given new life.

"Why was this incredible blunder perpetrated? The answer is simple. Because it was no one's business in particular to guard the gates of the Balkans. The one front had not become a reality. France and England were absorbed in other spheres. Italy had her mind on the Carso. Russia had a thousand-mile frontier to guard, and, even if she had not, she could not get through to help Serbia, because Rumania was neutral. It is true we sent forces to Saloniki to rescue Serbia, but, as usual, they were sent too late—when the mischief was complete.

"Half of these forces sent in time—nay, half the men who fell in the futile attempt to break through on the western front in September of that year—would have saved Serbia, would have saved the Balkans, and completed the blockade of Germany.

"You may say that is an old story. I wish it were. It is simply the first chapter of a serial which has been running to this hour. * * *

"When we advance a kilometer into the enemy's lines, snatch a small, shattered village out of his cruel grip, capture a few hundreds of his soldiers, we shout with unfeigned joy. And rightly so, for it is the symbol of our superiority over a boastful foe and a sure guaranty that in the end we can and shall win. But what if we had advanced fifty kilometers beyond his lines and made 200,000 of his soldiers prisoners and taken 2,500 of his best guns, with enormous quantities of ammunition and stores?"

Fundamental strategic errors, then, have been committed. The responsible cause of these errors in very simple. The leaders of the Entente, with the assurance born of their misconstruction of actual European conditions, of which they have afforded so many proofs, deeming themselves sure of their position, have obstinately refused to listen to the few men who are aware of the real object with which Germany entered on the war, and therefore of the means which would permit effective opposition to her success.

The same reason explains why Mr. Lloyd George's speech of Jan. 5, 1918, contains the heartrending contradictions and technical blunders to which I deem it my imperative duty to call the attention of my American readers. If his declarations relative to war indemnities should be followed by a practical application, France, on the signature of the treaty of peace, would be condemned to absolute bankruptcy, and the value of the French banknote would vanish with magical rapidity.

On the other hand, the declaration concerning the maintenance of the integrity of the Austro-Hungarian Empire is utterly at variance with the principle laid down by the Allies, that the different races must be permitted to decide freely concerning their own destiny. Now, the Czechs and Jugo-Slavs want no more of the Hapsburgs or of Austria-Hungary. Why compel them to remain subject to the yoke of Vienna, which, as all those familiar with the Central European problem are well aware, is unable to escape from the grip of Berlin?

If Austria-Hungary is allowed to exist, the promises of integral restitution made by Mr. Lloyd George to Rumania, Montenegro, and Serbia are valueless, because incapable of fulfillment by reason of the contiguity of the Austro-German mass. Nor has the promise of restitution of Alsace-Lorraine any greater value. Such restitution could not be permanent unless Pan Germany is definitively crushed—that is to say, unless Austria-Hungary disappears.

It is not pleasant to pluck one's self in opposition to the almost universal concert of approval which has greeted Mr. Lloyd George's declaration in allied countries; but I cannot consent to conceal a truth of which, in my judgment, it is indispensable for the Allies to be informed. For twenty years I stood alone in proclaiming the Pan Germanist peril, and the impending war in exactly the shape which it has assumed. I shall stand alone, if I must, in telling you this: Mr. Lloyd George's peace terms are either unrealizable or can result only in a terrible deception of the Allies which would cause them to lose the war by making Pan Germany triumphant.

All the foregoing leads us to insistence upon the urgent necessity of this step: To revise the revision of the war aims of the Allies as set forth in Mr. Lloyd George's program, for that program embodies technical blunders which make it either infinitely hazardous or practically unworkable.

One of the greatest services that the United States could render to the Allies in Europe would be to say to them:

"We, the United States, are determined to wage war to the limit by all the means at our disposal, but we do not propose that our men and our money shall be wasted to no avail. Henceforth the war must be carried on, and peace prepared for, in accordance with seriously considered, and hence truly scientific, plans, as well in the intellectual as in the material domain, and as well from a political as from a military standpoint."

I am well aware that you Americans, by the very force of circumstances, have much to learn from our military leaders in order to be able to carry on effectively this great war in which you have become involved so suddenly, but you have special advantages over the Allies in Europe, which should be utilized. Your distance from the other side of the Atlantic gives you the necessary interval of space to avoid being hypnotized by the special views of each of the Allies, and hence to see the conflict as a whole, which is most essential. Having never been obliged up to the present time to take sides in European political questions, you have none of the old-time erroneous ideas with regard to them which are held by the allied diplomats in Europe—archaic ideas which are the initial cause of all the diplomatic setbacks of the Allies. You have, therefore, nothing to forget. That gives you an immense chance of avoiding many disastrous blunders.

As it is certain that you have no predetermined plan, and as you are seeking honestly the actual truth, you will inevitably find it if you follow the method of your great captains of industry, all of whom know that, in order to accomplish anything important and efficacious in a province with which they are not familiar, they must begin by applying to the "expert." Of course, the expert is not infallible: he may, like all of us poor mortals, be mistaken; but when he really deserves to be called an expert, he avoids, with certainty, the commission of such monumental blunders as those heaped up by the European allied leaders simply because they did not realize the necessity of consulting experts.

Now, there are among the Allies experts on each of the great questions presented by the war and the peace that is to ensue, who are neither politicians, nor diplomats, nor soldiers, but who must be consulted because they know these questions, root and branch, for the very simple reason that they have studied them long and freely. To be sure, these men are far from numerous, but I declare that they do exist. If you Americans demand that henceforth a call shall be made upon men of real competence, and that there shall be no more discussion about phrases, but solely about carefully studied realities, you will confer upon all the Allies a tremendous service, which will bring us considerably nearer to victory.

All these advantages are peculiarly yours, Americans. If you choose to make the utmost use of them, you will then be, in many instances, in a position to play the part of a beneficent arbiter between the European Allies. Although their leading minds, having been taken unawares, have not conducted the war as they should have done, they are honest, well-meaning men. Your advice will certainly be welcomed provided they feel that it is invariably dictated in the interest of a mutual, decisive, complete victory—the only sort that can insure peace for many years to come, and save civilization.

Osage Ceremonial Song from the Oklahoma Pow Wow scene in Act Two of the new American opera "Shanewis", by Charles Wakefield Cadman.

THE DUO-ART PIANO

The Aeolian Company, New York City:

Dear Sirs: I consider it a privilege to be included in the catalogue of the Duo-Art. It is a novel satisfaction to hear one's own compositions proceed from the rolls interpreted with every dynamic and nuance impeccably delivered, every gradation of color reproduced.

The fact that I am convinced of the absolute superiority of the Duo-Art over all existing Recording Pianos, explains my having contracted to record exclusively for this instrument, which catches in such intimate fashion the personality of the artist.

Cordially yours,

(Signed) CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN.

Charles Wakefield Cadman is the composer of some of America's most popular songs and Lyrics.

His opera, "Shanewis," recently produced at the Metropolitan Opera House, has scored a signal success. The lovely Indian melodies and themes have already sprung into wide popularity.

Come to Aeolian Hall and hear the wonderful Duo-Art recordings of the great artists.

The Duo-Art is an amazing instrument of triple personality—piano, reproducing piano and Pianola in one. It is made in Steinway, Steck, Stroud and famous Weber models.

THE VOCALION

GIVES HAPPINESS AND DIVERSION TO OUR BOYS "OVER THERE"

MUSIC FOR SOLDIERS

Their need for melody and harmony—the wonderful opportunity afforded by the phonograph for music in the camps and cantonments, even in the trenches, is too well known to need further mention. It has been proved beyond question that good music is not only the soldier's greatest diversion, but his greatest inspiration as well.

MUSIC HERE AT HOME

We who stay at home need music, too. For music will calm and steady us; it will inspirit and strengthen us through hours of anxious waiting. We must hear and learn the patriotic songs and marches to which those brave young feet are so staunchly keeping time!

Do you know that the Vocalion, the phonograph made solely by the Aeolian Company, is the one complete phonograph on the market today? Do you know that it has resources for musical expression that no other phonograph possesses?

VOCALION COMPLETENESS

A phonograph that is only able to play the records made by one or two recording companies is not complete. The Vocalion of 1918 is equipped with a Universal Tone Arm which will play (and play with superior tonal realism) any standard phonograph record, no matter what make or "cut". One slight turn of the Sound Box is all that is required.

Why be confined to one or two makes of records, when this modern and completely equipped instrument will play them all?

VOCALION RESOURCEFULNESS

A phonograph to which you can listen only is all very well until you tire of listening. But all Vocalions at $110 and above contain the wonderful Graduola which permits you to play your records yourself; to accent, to shade, in a hundred delightful ways, the pieces of which you thought you had grown tired!

VOCALION ECONOMY

What could more effectually add to the economy of a phonograph purchase than a device such as this Graduola expression control which adds the unlimited resource of personal musical expression to your phonograph—and to your records?

Once you have heard the Vocalion and appreciate these great features of advantage, you will not be satisfied with a lesser phonograph.

Scores of musicians have pronounced the Vocalion "the truest in tone—the most musical of all phonographs."

The Vocalion is beautiful to look at, as well as to hear.

Are you going to purchase a phonograph without seeing and hearing the Vocalion? It costs no more than others.

VOCALION PRICES: Conventional models, $45 to $375. Period models, $215 to $615

GENERAL NEWS AND NOTES OF THE MUSICAL WORLD

Essays in Musical History—Life Stories from Strauss to Ornstein—Philharmonic Years Retold by Huneker.

THERE is an accumulation on the average musician's bookshelf at this time of year that indicates, by sheer weight of numbers, now far the recent months have been a period of agitated performance rather than leisurely criticism of performers or contemplation of what is performed, a time of concert giving more than composing, a season of deeds and not words. Psychologists, speaking of a certain lethargic mental readjustment to actively acquired physical facts, say that we "learn to skate in Summer, to swim in Winter." So the interest in books on musical subjects becomes apparent as the musical season wanes today.

Among recent publications, a readable and informing volume of "Excursions in Musical History" (H. W. Gray Company) has grown from the series of historical organ recitals given by Clarence Dickinson for some years at Union Theological Seminary. Helen A. Dickinson has collaborated with her husband in these friendly chapters, perhaps also in his programs that inspired them. As the preface remarks, the "Excursions" are made into social or intellectual periods, not of music alone, but of all the arts: the spacious days of Elizabeth, the reign of Louis XV., the fifteen famous Bachs, the reformation, the music of America.

Mr. Dickinson's technical studies add other subjects such as transcription, tonality, program music, sonata form, spiritual folksong, all presented in rambling though never aimless fashion, and in pictures of the life of the periods discussed. The book is handsomely illustrated. Its text contains much for the organist and musician as well as for the layman and amateur.

A Wartime Biography.

Yesterday marked the start of a second year during which America may doubtless continue to take its opera without Wagner, its symphony orchestras without Strauss. Yet one of these men still lives, and students of music must recast in silence their opinions of the arch despot of din. Hence the interest of Henry T. Finck's "Richard Strauss—the Man and His Work," (Little, Brown & Co.) a biography evidently long in preparation and published at a time when the name of Strauss is heard less frequently than that of Wagner, of Liszt, or, for obvious reasons, of a famous Frenchman, the father of modern orchestration, Berlioz.

Mr. Finck makes no apology for his hero, since he frankly places one of these other men above Strauss. Franz Liszt for him, among the giants, is first in melody, in clarity of treatment, even in imagination. Contrapuntal skill is conceded to Strauss, whose mastery of polyphony is often his own undoing. The biographer grants exceptions in the case of Strauss's earlier songs and tone-poems, "Don Juan," "Death and Transfiguration," "Till Owlglass's Merry Pranks." Of the last moments of the opera "Salome" Mr. Finck says:

"The music of this final apostrophe of the head huntress is almost as beautiful, as touching, as sublime, as Isolde's Love's Death in Wagner's tragedy, which served as its model. It is a musical masterpiece, horribly, damnably wasted on the most outrageous scene ever placed before a modern audience."

Some facts of Strauss's career and character are drawn from the German, Steinmetz, some witty anecdotes from ephemeral newspaper reports of the composer, "close-fisted," as he is declared to be, yet not without artistic generosity. Mr. Finck in a preface says the best thing in his volume is an "appreciation" written for it by Percy Grainger. What praise the author had denied, the Australian pianist bestows with lavish hand:

"Among the great composers of our era Richard Strauss seems to me to stand forth as a type of the gemütlich family man in music: normal, kindly, well balanced; a genius by reason of attributes of the soul and heart rather than those of the head. I see permeating his music a humane soul overflowing with the milk of human kindness. Strauss appears to me to become more mellow, more genuine, more effortlessly himself with each successive work."

A reader of the volume has already suggested that, between two extremes, the truth about Strauss will probably be found nearer to Mr. Finck than it is to Mr. Grainger.

An Orchestral Postscript.

Privately issued within the last weeks, there comes a volume on "The Philharmonic Society of New York—A Retrospect," by the eminent critic, James Gibbons Huneker. His book of 130 pages, now published in commemoration of the Philharmonic's seventy-fifth-year jubilee last year, contains a short historical sketch of this veteran orchestra's career during three-quarters of a century, as well as a brilliant, if brief, literary appreciation of the modern orchestra in general as the unit of latter-day symphonic music. This is the second volume of the sort put forward since the founding of the Philharmonic in 1842; the first was printed at the time of the society's fiftieth anniversary, and was written by Henry E. Krehbiel, with the collaboration of Richard Aldrich.

Mr. Huneker's postscript to Mr. Krehbiel's former history makes a neat companion volume of about equal size, including an added table of all music performed from the fifty-first season, under Seidl, until the diamond jubilee year. There are portraits of conductors, and a presidential address of Mr. Villard, now retired. Mr. Huneker says of the present conductor, Mr. Stransky, that he "has grown in artistic stature" since his advent in America; of the present orchestra, the critic adds that "it has rivals now, but to it will always belong the glory of having been the first adventurer in a strange country." In other words, he finds in the story of the Philharmonic a history of music in America.

There is "no such thing as map-music" to Mr. Huneker, even now in wartime. There is only good music. He mentions princely gifts to the society, in spite of which, he says, "this season's series of concerts was undertaken only after the Board of Directors had guaranteed a fund of $60,000 to meet a possible deficit." Mr. Pulitzer's preferred composers, Beethoven, Wagner, Liszt, "have always prominently figured in performance." Beethoven as a matter of course; Wagner at first as a novelty introduced by Bergmann and Thomas, while later "under Seidl the spell was irresistible." The retrospect suggested by his book's title is throughout a kindly one; its motto might be the Latin proverb, "Haec olim meminisse juvabit."

Ornstein, Boy and Man.

In "Leo Ornstein: The Man—His Ideas, His Work," (Breitkopf & Hartel,) a friendly biographer, Frederick H. Martens, suggests most sharply a saying of those of old time, that "The boy is father to the man." The late Mrs. Bertha Feiring Tapper's sound training of the prodigy from New York's east side forms the corrective chapter to many accounts of modern musical absurdities. Mr. Martens in his preface notes that "Ornstein to many represents an evil musical genius wandering in a weird No-Man's Land haunted with futuristic despair, with cubist shrieks and post-impressionistic cries and crashes." Born in Russia, the boy suffered persecution with his people there. He was eyewitness of the revolution of 1905 in Petrograd.

Heard by Hofmann in his native Kremenchug, he later played for Glazounow at the Petrograd Conservatory. "At the test he gave an unconscious exhibition of his possession of perfect pitch. The piano, though not out of tune, had been tuned a half-tone lower than ordinary, and the boy of 8 years, sensitive to the change, transposed at sight pieces by Bach and Mozart. Glazounow was interested, and had him play three-part inventions of Bach blindfold, and tell him the names of the chords." Today for Ornstein the man, chords and discords do not exist. A "Wild Men's Dance" and "Dwarf Suite" typify his ideas of composition. "A subtle musical intuition seems to prompt their extremely plastic resolutions, the reflection of a logic of emotion rather than of mathematical design."

There is "no suspicion of pose" in the mannerisms revealed in his playing in public; yet the details of his technical presentation at the keyboard have furnished matter for abundant discussion, some of which Mr. Martens quotes from as far away as Australia. Ornstein has traveled, almost as widely as his music, he has lived and written in Paris and London, and some eighty-nine pages tell his work up to today. A "Suite Belgium," a series of mood pictures akin to the "Poems of 1917," springs out of deep sympathy evoked, his biographer declares, by the fate of a people ground between the millstones of modern war.

ENGLAND'S WARTIME OPERA IN ENGLISH

From "Figaro" to "Ivan" at Old Drury Lane—Late Season Concerts in New York—Friends and Festivals.

OVER yonder, in an English-speaking metropolis that is 3,000 miles nearer the battlefront than New York, they are still giving opera in London, a season of forty performances having recently opened at old Drury Lane with a repertory of twenty titles. The four years of war seem to have found the British nation a bit more advanced than Americans as yet are thought to be in the matter of taking a once aristocratic and exclusive entertainment on the more democratic and patriotic plan of opera in the language of the country and of the people.

Never more welcome, as The London Times remarked, than when it plays Mozart, the Beecham Company began its new season on a Saturday afternoon in March with "The Marriage of Figaro," which was now "apparently restored to its former rank as perhaps the most popular of all operas." The Thunderer still urged that the simple old opera would gain a good deal if it were presented more as a real play and with less of the "costume ball" atmosphere. On the evening of the opening day, "Aida" was sung, also in English, and by native stars, earning the remark that "it could hardly have been better sung, acted, or conducted." The following week brought "Samson," "Faust," "Butterfly," again "Figaro;" "Cavalleria" and "Pagliacci," "Magic Flute," "Bohème," coupled with the novelty of old Bach's "Phoebus and Pan," and finally "Trovatore."

For a second week, The Daily Telegraph waxed enthusiastic over prospects of "the glorious 'Boris Godunoff' on Tuesday, the equally glorious 'Tristan' on Thursday, and the even more glorious 'Seraglio' on Friday," with such others as "Louise," and repetitions of "Samson," "Butterfly," "Faust" and the translated Italian double bill. "I do not suppose," said the critic, "that in any European opera house at this moment is a more varied or better week's repertory to be heard."

The feature of the third week, according to announcements just to hand, was a first performance under the Beecham régime of "Tannhäuser," with a ballet of the Venusberg revels, which report said was "likely to be talked about." So in America—in New York, say, just now—would be any production of "Tannhäuser" at all. The other additions were Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Ivan the Terrible," Bizet's "Fair Maid of Perth," a first "Tosca," and once more "Samson," "Figaro," "Aida," and "Faust."

The Beecham scheme, a most ambitious one for opera in English, is of interest on this side of the Atlantic at the New York season's end, when the Metropolitan is renewing subscriptions for next year, and Director Gatti-Casazza is casting about for novelties and revivals amid the difficulties sure to be renewed in another "war season."

Friends of "American" Music.

Twenty-six concerts of admirable music, new and old, in New York constitute the record of five seasons, the latest of these ending today, by a society somewhat apart from the usual run of musical entertainments. The Friends of Music first organized themselves here on the model of similar "Friends" in Europe, to "revive works of interest, and to bring before the public American composers as well as the latest European compositions which deserve a hearing."

The list of music which the society has sponsored, much of it for the first time in New York or in America, is imposing. It arranged and managed the now famous concerts in 1917, of the works of Ernst Bloch, then an almost unknown composer, sojourning in this country with little more than a letter from Romain Rolland and his own scores to recommend him. Three "Jewish Poems," three "Psalms," and particularly the splendid "Schelomo" rhapsody, were played at this concert. In all his years in Europe he had scarcely heard as many single performances of his music as at this one concert. Still earlier, John Powell, the thoughtful Virginian, had in the Fall of 1916 the opportunity of presenting his most serious compositions, including the amazing "Sonata Teutonica," which, as he explained at the time, was Teutonic "only in a legendary sense."

The performance of Mahler's stupendous Eighth Symphony at the Metropolitan Opera House in the same season, under the Friends of Music auspices, was again such an undertaking as only generous patronage can foster. Other large works which have received their first performance in New York, thanks to the "friendship" of the society, are Ernest Schelling's concerto for violin, Leopold Stokowski's "Dithyrambe," the strange "Chromaticon" by Josef Hofmann's mysterious confrère, Mihel Dvorsky, whom nobody has ever seen, and Arnold Schoenberg's intensely interesting "Kammersymphonic." Granados received from the society the deserved compliment of a recital all to himself, the last he gave before his tragic death from a German torpedo on what was intended to be his return journey to Spain. Nor should the unpronounceable Szymanowski be forgotten, nor many a minor song.

Four composers of America will end for the present the activities of the Friends of Music at their concert today. The program includes David Stanley Smith's quartet No. 2, in A major, Op. 37; Samuel Gardner's "Andanto quasi variazioni," Victor Kolar's "Allegro" from a quartet, No. 2, in E major, Op. 17, and Charles-Martin Loeffler's two "Rhapsodies" for oboe, viola, and piano. It deserves remark that, among these, the last is the only published score, the others still in manuscript.

Folksongs by the Schola.

The Schola Cantorum, which will close its ninth season with a concert by its chorus of 150 voices on Tuesday of this week at Carnegie Hall, will sing on this occasion a group of favorite Russian folksongs and ballads, including "The Ballad of the Volga," familiar to every Russian, and "Down St. Petr's Road," a song of the post-drivers of Tver, the melody of which Stravinsky used as one of the main themes for the ballet "Petrushka." There are also "The Hapless Bride," belonging to the class of humorous wedding songs acted and sung by the peasants; "The Ballad of the Kremlin," a song of the Siberian prisons; "Kalinka," a traditional melody from the times of serfdom, and "Dunya," a Bessarabian song of the Danube. Boris Saslavsky, a Russian, will sing the baritone solos in these numbers.

The women's chorus will sing a Slavonic song cycle by Josef Suk, followed by Finnish songs by the male chorus, written by that country's greatest composers. A stirring and unusual "Song of Exile," by Sibelius, will be heard for the first time outside of Finland. As mentioned in this column last week, the concert will close with the singing by the entire chorus of a group of folksongs of America.

"Zuni Indian, Kentucky mountain, and American negro music make up this closing group, among the latter being a song from St. Helena's Island, off the coast of South Carolina, recently recorded by Natalie Curtis Burlin and never before sung on a concert stage. Harry T. Burleigh has furnished two "negro spirituals," in which he will sing the solo airs.

Spring Festivals Far and Near.

The Newark Music Festival Association will give its fourth annual festival on April 30, May 1 and 2, when the soloists engaged are Geraldine Farrar, Cecil Arden, Giovanni Martinelli, and Clarence Whitehill, together with Lucy Gates, Margaret Namara, Margaret Abbott, Theo Karle, and Arthur Middleton. A festival chorus of about 850 singers will be directed by C. Mortimer Wiske, and among the works to be performed are Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Massenet's "Eve."

The Cincinnati May Music Festival, all profits of which will be divided between the war funds of the American Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A., will take place May 7 to 11, under the direction of Eugen Ysaye. Among the soloists will be Florence Hinkle, Mabel Garrison, Margaret Matzenauer, Merle Alcock, Evan Williams, Lambert Murphy, Clarence Whitehill, and Reinald Werrenrath. The principal works to be performed include Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," Haydn's "The Seasons," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Wolf-Ferrari's "The New Life," and a novelty by Edgar Stillman Kelley, "The Pilgrim's Progress."

The Bach Festival for 1918 is just announced at South Bethlehem, Penn., where the annual performances will be held as usual in the Packer Memorial Church of Lehigh University, on May 24 and 25 next. Dr. J. Fred Wolle will lead the 250 singers, with the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Moravian Trombone Choir. The soloists will be Mildred Faas, Mae Hotz, Emma Roberts, Merle Alcock, Nicholas Douty, and Charles T. Tittmann. For the opening session, Friday afternoon, the works chosen are the cantatas, "My Spirit Was in Heaviness," "God's Time Is the Best," and "Now Shall the Grace." That evening adds an "Ode of Mourning" and the "Magnificat." The two Saturday sessions will be devoted to Bach's Mass in B minor, at 2 o'clock the "Kyrie" and "Gloria," and at 5 o'clock from the "Credo" to the end.

The Late Henry Schradieck.

Theodore Spiering has issued a memorial tribute to Henry Schradieck, violinist and teacher, who was permitted, as his former pupil declares, to remain in semi-obscurity for the last twenty years in America. According to his friend, Mr. Schradieck was a figure that loomed high in the seventies and eighties. As a teacher at the Conservatory of Moscow, a concertmaster in Hamburg, and Leipsic, he undoubtedly experienced the greatest success of his career. A successor to Ferdinand David in the Leipsic Conservatory, he had for his intimate associates the luminous personalities of that period.

Schradieck, in 1883, accepted a call from the Cincinnati College of Music to become the head violin instructor of that institution. At the same time the conductorship of the Cincinnati Orchestra was offered him, which post he held as long as he remained in the West. It was in Cincinnati in 1886 that Mr. Spiering became Schradieck's pupil, and two years later, when he left the college, it was with his letter to Joachim that the young artist went to Berlin.

Soon after this Schradieck also returned to Hamburg, intending to reestablish himself in the city of his birth, but the longing for the country in which most of his large family of children were born soon brought him back to America. From that time on he made Brooklyn his home, and it was there that he passed away on Monday, March 25, after a life of unalterable devotion to his profession.

In recent years he had spent one day each week in Philadelphia at the Broad Street Conservatory. His final lessons were given there two days before the end.

PLAYS AND PLAYERS IN THE NEW YORK THEATRES

OLD VAINGLORY

By JOHN CORBIN.

DOES the national sense of humor desert us in wartime? In "An American Ace" the Heavy Patriot says: "I vote for Theodore Roosevelt every chance I get, but I tell you that Woodrow Wilson is . . ." The dots stand for everything Theodore Roosevelt has spent so many thousands of words in saying that Woodrow Wilson is not. Both names were applauded, and especially the name of T. R. But would the Cassandra of Oyster Bay be quite content with this sure-fire supporter? Love me, love my dog, is the motto of the sterling man; vote for me, vote for my cause, is that of the sterling statesman. The party of the other part is in an even more trying predicament, for what availeth it if a man gain the great eulogium we have comprehensively indicated in dots if he does not also gain votes? In this outburst of melodramatic patriotism there is surely something deeply derisible. But not to the American audience, which applauded from a full heart and without the least suspicion that it was being melodramatically gulled. There are occasions when it seems as if there never has been such a thing as an American sense of humor.

A similar case is presented by another recent melodrama, "The Man Who Stayed at Home." Originally an English play, written and produced both in London and here while America was still proclaiming that the war was not our war, it has been revised in Pittsburgh to tickle our public of the present. One of the additions is a line to the effect that, while England has done much toward winning the war, America will do twice as much, and win it. This line also was loudly applauded. The war which during almost three years, when help was vitally needed, was "not our war," has suddenly become our own exclusive property.

But what have we actually done, aside from boasting of a future that is still receding before us? In a "patriotic" musical play produced some months ago, at the time when we were promising to win the war with a fleet of thousands upon thousands of airplanes, there was a scene in which the Germans were routed by a vast horde of American aviators swarming up the back drop. Last week, on the very day we recorded the melodramatic triumphs of that American ace, our leading Democratic newspaper repeated Senator Lodge's statement that we have not one American-built fighting plane in France. Ten months ago the American people appropriated for airplanes $640,000,000, a sum which would build eighty-two dreadnoughts, sister ships of the California. Yet the most responsible official promise is that in July, thirteen months after the appropriation, we shall have some eighty combat airplanes. Among many reasons for this delay, according to the same Democratic authority, is the fact that the much-heralded Liberty motor is a failure, "not fast enough for a fighting plane, and too heavy for reconnoissance." The authorities at Washington still assure us that the Liberty motor is all right; but they add, somewhat ominously, that in any event it will be very useful for tanks. Yet, in the face of all this, our audiences applaud melodrama which represents American aviators as winning the war, and grow ecstatic at the waving of a flag which may some day be known as Old Vain-Glory.

If our public is content with such handling of war themes it is in a perilous state. The time is passing rapidly when our vast promises of money, of equipment, and of men will satisfy us. The lists of our casualties are growing, and as yet the most notable result to chronicle is that we have, in some minor matters, aided our allies in staving off irretrievable disaster. Before many days our dearest and best will lie dead about us, with the victory in France as far as ever, perhaps, from actual achievement. What will nerve us onward then? Not the promise of millions of airplanes clouding the sky, to the utter rout of musical comedy Germans. Not the frantic waving of Old Vain-Glory. The one and sovereign remedy will be in the still depths of our desolate hearts. If then we are to go on, we must have the habit of looking the truth in the face, and looking it down.

Woe betide the republic that applauds its own errors. Autocracies live by the process, but in a democracy the supreme virtue lies in clear self-knowledge, in vigorous and effective self-criticism. And of this the power of laughing at one's self is the quintessential soul. For laughter of this kind is not levity: it is the golden product of a mind that is clean and unclouded, working in harmony with unconquerable courage.

Is this too much to expect of frank melodrama? Of our American melodrama perhaps it is. But we have lately had the privilege of seeing a play of precisely the same order written and acted by Englishmen for the purpose of inspiring British subjects among us to go to the front. Was there any lasting in it? In one song, perhaps:

We stopped them at the Marne,
We licked them at the Aisne,
We gave them hell at Neuvechapelle,
And here we are, and here we are again!

But note that the boasting, if it be such, is confined to things of a definite past. Of the present the song says only that the British are still on the spot. Of the future it says nothing. If an American had written that song, the last line, it is to be feared, would have promised the taking of the Kaiser's scalp in Berlin.

And this was the sole note of exultation in the entire evening. For the rest, the picturing of war was sober reality, however transfused with humor. As already pointed out in these columns, one song voiced the mood of war weariness:

I don't want this old war any more,
I want to go 'ome.

But it was written by a man who was fighting the battle of Ypres, and who stuck to the end. Throughout "Getting Together" the idea of death was ever present. In Percival Knight's little "Trench Fantasy" his very figure was shown, side by side with the spirit of Christmas. And while it was noted that the good saint was there for a single day, one was made to feel that the other spirit hovered around them, always, reaping his multitudinous harvest. The fingers of a grisly terror ran down the spines of those in the audience—as of those in the play. But it was only for a moment. Then the faces of the three soldiers clenched in a resolute grin, and the scene ended in the heroic mood.

Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag,
And smile, smile, smile!

No man can do that who does not know his troubles, every one; for there is no true courage, as there is no true humor, except it be founded on the deepest sense of reality. The ultimate shame of this national contrast in war melodrama lies in the fact that, unless we are faithless in our past, we are worthy of the better sort even while we accept the worse. Never yet, in the final test, has the American spirit bowed in defeat. And today, while our playwrights and managers are pandering to our national silliness and vainglory, our public is flocking to this British play, which, melodrama though it is, speaks out of the depths in France to the deepest soul of America. Even viewed by the standards of a frankly commercial theatre, the genuine appeal was the more successful. Yet the fact remains that in the theatre, as in political life, our instinctive reaction to the idea of war is without a sense either of reality or of humor. And the fact is as damaging to our arms as to our drama.

Henry Miller's Theatre.

WITH all our multiplication of playhouses, there are not more than two or three that have any definite character; and among these none has anything like the standard of the famous theatres of the past, down to Daly's and the old Lyceum. It was perhaps to remedy this defect that Henry Miller built his new house. No such intention is proclaimed. In his salutatory speech Mr. Miller was modesty itself: "I shall do my best because I am not great enough to afford anything less." But in the material equipment at least he has set a new standard.

His theatre is of the ideal size and shape, carrying to perfection the type of house established in the new Lyceum and the Maxine Elliott, with a broad, shallow auditorium, seating about 1,000. A notable feature is that the top gallery, which has been omitted from many recent theatres—as a result perhaps of the competition of the movie houses—is retained. Mr. Miller has a tender memory of his own lofty beginnings as a playgoer and a desire, which is wise, as it is generous, to include in his audiences the youthful and those of humble means. For it is they who are most liberally endowed with imagination and the hunger for beauty.

The decorations are at once rich and in the perfection of good taste, from the reproductions, high on the side walls, of the famous portraits of Nellie Farren and John Philip Kemble down to the unusually comfortable orchestra chairs and the truly magnificent smoking room. The single scene of "The Fountain of Youth," with which the house opened, was a drawing room built of wood and furnished with equal simplicity and richness.

The play itself is insubstantial and, at times, long drawn out; but it sustains the note of intelligent good taste which is characteristic of the new house as a whole, and is at times delightfully witty and charming. At least it may be said that it does not in any way belie the high good taste of the new enterprise as a whole and that it gives good promise of more substantial work in the future. It serves admirably to introduce the new house, and to fill out the post-Easter season. For the coming year Mr. Miller promises more substantial fare.

IN THE MAILBAG.

John Corbin—

Dear Sir: I enjoyed immensely your article, "Arthur Wing Pinero and His Boswell," which appeared in your columns several weeks ago. Your estimate of Pinero and the place you award him in the domain dramatique no one can take exception to, and I would not write this letter if it were not for your correspondent, Mr. Harry Firiman, who takes issue with you on your analysis of "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray." Mr. Firiman writes: "I not only agree with you that 'The Second Mrs. Tanqueray' is not a great play, but say further that it is mush purely."

If Mr. Clayton Hamilton has been extravagant in his praise of Mr. Pinero, your correspondent belittles him entirely too much. I will admit that the play in question suffers from an overabundance of technique. The cumulative incidents that lead up to the climax are invented by the author to untie the knot. They do not come as a logical sequence of the action; but it is not true, as Mr. Firiman states, that Paula commits suicide because Pinero has nothing more to say. Paula commits suicide because she had to, except that the situation that is responsible for Paula's tragic end is, as you have put it, "occasioned by a coincidence."

If it was the author's intention merely to show that circumstances over which man has no control not infrequently decide his faith, his labor was in vain. The Greek dramatists told us that better and more ably, over two thousand years ago. However, that was not the author's intention. He wanted to show us how hopelessly impossible it is for a woman of Paula's type to be regenerated, and that suicide, therefore, was her only refuge. In that he failed, because we leave the theatre with the impression that if Eileen had not fallen in love with Captain Ardale, Paula might have gone on living. To destroy Paula, Pinero enlisted the aid of deus ex machina—in this instance the army officer. This theatrical situation would have been unnecessary if the author had taken the trouble and the time to study the psychology of Paula's type. The monotony of her new life, the sudden change from the bright lights to dull domestic duties, her disappointment in married life, in her husband, her mental anguish occasioned by being snobbed, the thought that Eileen was sent away for fear of being contaminated by her, all in all were sufficient to cause general depression, lead to a soul crisis, and ultimately to suicide. But the author sacrificed logic in order to heighten theatrical effect. The technique he employed to kill Paula also killed what might have been a masterpiece. But to call this play "mush" requires courage, to say the least.

Pinero possesses all the technique of Ibsen, but he has not his vision. Before Ibsen invested the people of his imagery with incarnate human form, he investigated their lives from childhood, he listened to their talk for months, he learned their views, studied their idiosyncrasies. The notions of his characters are not directed by the gods out of the machine, but by human motives—motives prompted by best intentions. Brand, Peer Gynt, Nora, Mrs. Alving, Hedda Gabler, and the others who make a mess of their lives, fail because they are human; and human beings will, in the words of Oscar Wilde, "sometimes do the stupidest things from the noblest motives."

Technique is the nemesis of the playwright who has no message to convey. Technique begets uniformity, uniformity destroys originality, renders thought stagnant, and gives birth to an emasculated drama. Pinero's plays suffer from an overdose of technique; hence their staleness.

WILLIAM J. PERLMAN.
Baltimore, April 3, 1918.

[As applied to "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," these charges seem true enough; but in subsequent studies of neurotic modern women, notably "Iris" and "Mid-Channel," Pinero gives us full-length portraits realized inwardly and outwardly down to the ground. And the plays are genuine tragedy dominated each by an authentic mood. Mr. Hamilton would have rendered a more substantial service to Pinero if, instead of discussing "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" as a "great" play and a landmark in the English drama, he had regarded it as a journeyman work of promise, presaging masterpieces the full value of which is perhaps still to be recognized.—J. C.]

MELODRAMA AS A BUSINESS

STRANGE echoes of a still stranger past were stirred up by A. H. Woods's production last Tuesday of that patriotic "melter," "An American Ace." Lincoln J. Carter, who wrote the piece, is unique in show business. Together with Theodore Kremer and Owen Davis he wrote the picturesque melodramas of yore, and generally it was A. H. Woods who produced them. With the passing of the vogue for this type of entertainment, Carter has dropped from the theatrical limelight, emerging now and then by reason of a scenic effect contributed to a Winter Garden extravaganza.

Exclusive of these bits, however, Carter has not been heard from for eight years. His claim to uniqueness in the theatre lies in the fact that his plays, more than any others in the world, are not written, but built. They begin, invariably, with a scenic effect, grow to include other scenic effects, and these effects are then threaded together by a narrative sufficiently plastic to include them all. For many years he has maintained a studio in Chicago for the construction of these effects; from this studio came "An American Ace." This method of procedure distinguishes him from the other writers of melodrama. Carter is not a writer of melodrama, he is in melodrama as a business. With a war raging and the public showing signs of inclining again toward elemental drama, it may be that Carter's business will flourish again.

Carter's life has been melodramatic from the first. His parents were strolling players, and he was born on April 14, 1865, the day on which Lincoln was shot. He was named, accordingly, after the martyred President.

One of the first theatrical companies ever carried across the continent of the United States by rail traveled under the care of Carter's father. His mother, who became a popular star, was playing at the California Theatre, in San Francisco, when William H. Seward of Lincoln's Cabinet made his trip to Alaska to arrange for the purchase of that territory for the United States Government. Mr. Seward, a patron of the theatre, became acquainted with Mr. Carter's parents, and, learning that their company was to tour the north coast, he invited them to be his guests. In this way it happened that the Carters gave the first American dramatic performances ever given in Alaska, going to Sitka on board a United States revenue cutter, Lincoln J., at that time only 8 years old, has vivid recollections of the trip in the shape of a cinnamon bear and a kindly pat on the back from Seward when his hat blew off into the sea.

After this the Carters became members of Brigham Young's stock company in Salt Lake City, at the time when the mother of Maude Adams was acting there. Here Lincoln J. did his first work in the theatrical business—holding the ancient and honorable position of call boy at the age of 10. An early predilection for drawing, painting, and building shortly afterward developed into the career which brought him fame and fortune.

In Chicago, in 1885, at the age of 20, he wrote, built, and produced his first play, "Idonia." Four years later he wrote and produced the melodrama that made him famous—"The Fast Mail." After this he wrote and produced a play each year until he had written thirty-two in all. For a period of from fifteen to twenty years his net income from these pieces ranged from $15,000 to $35,000 a year, then a huge sum for the theatre to yield up.

All of these pieces were of a sensational character, scenically and mechanically. They included such well-remembered classics of that school as "The Tornado," "The Defaulter," "Under the Dome," and "The Heart of Chicago." At the outbreak of the Spanish war he produced a gigantic spectacle called "Remember the Maine," in which he reproduced no less an event than the battle of Manila. He then bought the Criterion Theatre, Chicago, and for a number of years made his productions from that house, including "The Flaming Arrow," "Down Mobile," "The Eleventh Hour," "Two Little Waifs," "Too Proud to Beg," and a host of others with titles as alluring. Later, at the Fourteenth Street Theatre in this city, he produced "Bedford's Hope," in which he first introduced the automobile on the stage. An "effect" of an automobile racing with a train through the desert was at that time considered the last word in mechanical ingenuity, and created a sensation.

Carter's formula for writing these plays was as simple as it was novel. He merely selected his mechanical and scenic effects and wrote the play around them. No phenomenon on land or sea could baffle him. He evolved his ideas, wrote his play, designed his models, and built his scenery himself in his Chicago studio. Then, to add the touch of finality to his versatile performance, he produced his plays himself. His greatest rival at that time was his present producer, A. H. Woods.

Both Carter and Woods made fortunes out of the business, to say nothing of earning soubriquets which were known not only in the United States, but in England and Australia. Carter became known as the "King of Scenic Effects," and the term "Carteresque" began to be applied to productions of sensational magnitude. Woods achieved the title of "King of Melodrama," and coined the word "punch." According to Carter, it was an easy game. The cost of production, because of the cheap casts, was trifling compared to the present day. The success of the plays was assured. If they didn't go in one town they were successful in another. A New York or Chicago run had nothing to do with the case. The average production cost $2,500.

Amazing as are Carter's scenic achievements, his method is simple. His effects are mostly a matter of drops and profiles, with his minute and expert knowledge of lighting, of course, playing a large part. One of the scenes in "An American Ace" is a battle in the clouds between an American flier and four German planes. The effect is obtained by a panoramic curtain and a lowering of gauze drops in front of this, with light effects from behind and front and stereopticon clouds from the balcony. The airplanes that are seen battling above the broad landscape are painted on profile models and pulled up on trout lines. Nevertheless, fifty-five men are required on the stage to work the show, and it took nearly three months to build the models and the scenery.

When the movies ended the prosperous régime of melodrama, Carter withdrew as a playwright and confined himself to the creation of scenic and mechanical effects, most of which have been seen at the Winter Garden. Approaching locomotives, racing trains, and a cavalry charge of mechanical horses bearing living riders are the effects which have attracted the greatest attention there.

For the Man in Uniform

TWO Sunday performances are now given regularly in New York to which there is no admission charge for the man in uniform. The Sunday matinées under the direction of the New York War Camp Community Service, formerly given at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, are transferred to the Casino beginning today. Among this afternoon's entertainers will be Fred Stone, Barney Bernard, Leo Carillo, and Houdini.

The second Sunday performance is at night at the Playhouse, and is under the joint direction of the Community Service and the Stage Women's War Relief. At both of these performances the uniform of the United States or our allies is a ticket of admission.

In addition, the Community Service has opened offices in the former Earlington Hotel, Twenty-seventh Street, near Sixth Avenue, where theatre tickets may be bought at reduced rates. The tickets are supplied by managers whose attractions are beginning to lose their Broadway appeal, and in many instances tickets can be obtained for the amount of the war tax.

UP AND DOWN BROADWAY

DAVID BELASCO'S zeal in the guarding of secrets concerning plays in the making is more or less celebrated, but from the Belasco laboratories, nevertheless, there have seeped certain random facts regarding the new play in which Frances Starr is to appear. This play, which is now in rehearsal, will be given its first performance in Baltimore in a few weeks, and is more or less formally scheduled to be the attraction at the Belasco in the Fall.

The piece is called "Over the Hills," and is in some ways not unlike "The Return of Peter Grimm." Miss Starr will be seen as a spirit, but in this instance there will be no scenes before death, as there were in the case of Peter Grimm. Accordingly, the piece is unique in that Miss Starr has no scenes with any other character in the play—in the sense that scenes are customarily regarded. That is to say, there is no direct dialogue. The story concerns the power of the spirit as an influence for good.

The identity of the author is one of the items which remain dark secrets.

As intimated in these pages several Sundays ago, Mrs. Fiske is about to return to New York. A week from tomorrow she will be seen at the Cohan Theatre, to which house "Toot-Toot!" seems to be unable to rally the populace in sufficient quantities. In Henri Lavedan's drama, "Service." This piece, although written before the war, is nothing if not timely. In it Mrs. Fiske will be seen as the mother of two boys, the one eager for service, the second a pacifist. The play, according to accounts, is concerned with the mother's conversion of the second son.

"Service" will be preceded by "A Night at an Inn," Dunsany's thriller, which has been a little over two years in getting from Grand Street to Broadway. The supposition is that it waited for a surface car.

London is threatened with a closing order similar to the 10 o'clock edict, whose very shadow recently spread consternation on this side of the water, except that in London the hour promises to be 9:30 instead of 10. The managers accordingly are up in arms, and the arguments which became familiar to New Yorkers during the recent squall are now being duly advanced by the London managers. An order of this sort would compel the theatres to begin their evening performances at 6:30 o'clock or not at all, and, as between the two, the latter policy probably would be selected. Several times during the last few years, when the Zeppelin raids were at their height, the London managers have abandoned evening performances entirely and have substituted matinées. The results were far from as disastrous as might have been expected, and there is no doubt that the theatres could be kept alive indefinitely under such a system.

Elsie Janis has duly reached France, and has been singing to audiences of American soldiers for several weeks. Another American entertainer in France is Irvin S. Cobb, although Cobb, of course, is not there primarily for that purpose. For a month or so, however, he has been spinning yarns to soldiers.

After five months of exemption the business of the ticket speculator is finally to feel the weight of the war tax. When the war tax measure was originally drawn up, early last Fall, the taxes put on brokers and speculators were the most severe of the lot. At the suggestion of William J. Fallon of the Tyson Company a 50 cent advance was recognized as legitimate, and accordingly taxed only 5 per cent., but prices obtained in excess of this were taxed as high as 30 per cent., and in some cases 50.

It was this very attempt to legislate the speculator out of existence, however, which caused the entire tax structure, so far as ticket premiums were concerned, to fall. It was pointed out by ticket men that the purpose of the tax was to raise revenue, and not to threaten the existence of any particular line of workers. The necessity of passing the measure in the last few days of Congress made it impossible to go into the question further, and the paragraph relating to speculators was therefore simply dropped. Accordingly the speculator emerged as the only person connected with the theatre who was not taxed.

Now, however, the good old days are over, and the broker and the speculator, the distinction is between ticket men who ask an advance of 50 cents a ticket and those who ask whatever they can get) will hereafter be required to surrender 10 per cent. of their profits. If the speculator continues as elusive as he has been in the past, however, he will merely solve this problem by adding the 10 per cent. to the burdens of the ultimate consumer, and thinking no more about it.

Speaking of brokers and such things, the latest information on the subject is that just half a dozen attractions are now enjoying "hugs"—that is, outright purchases of a certain number of seats nightly for a certain period by the ticket men. The half dozen are "The Rainbow Girl," "Sinbad," "Jack o' Lantern," "The Copperhead," "Going Up," and "Oh, Lady! Lady!!"

It is possible that the rush to produce war plays will be momentarily slackened by the realization that even in war times a war play can fail. The most recent example is "The Rape of Belgium," written by two experienced theatrical hands, Max Marcin and Louis K. Anspacher, and endowed with one of A. H. Woods's best play titles. The piece has been two weeks in Boston, which would have none of it, and accordingly the end came in that city last night. A few weeks ago the Oliver Morosco production of "The Little Belgian" suffered a like fate in Philadelphia. Accordingly, as has been said, it is possible that managers about to produce war plays will hesitate, but it is even a little more possible that they won't.

The southwest corner of Broadway and Ninety-fifth Street, which has successively held a market and a roller skating rink, is to be used next for a theatre. A movie palace seating 1,500 persons or thereabouts is to be made out of the present structure, and it will be known as the Symphony Theatre. All doubts as to the high-class policy of the new house are set at rest by the announcement that it will show only "pre-super pictures."

David Belasco, by way of proving his great faith in the future of Lenore Ulric, is trusting the writing of her next play to no one, but is doing it himself. The new play, according to accounts, is Japanese in theme. There is little likelihood of its being produced in the near future, as "Tiger Rose" will undoubtedly keep Miss Ulric occupied for as many seasons as seem to be desirable.

It has been any number of years since Chauncey Olcott has played an engagement on or near Broadway, but he is presently to do so at the Fulton. George H. Grundy, entrepreneur of the Lexington Theatre, is at present occupying the Fulton with his production of "Love's Lightning," but the week to come will mark Mr. Grundy's withdrawal as a Broadway manager. Mr. Olcott will occupy the Fulton for three weeks with a Rachel Crothers comedy called "Once Upon a Time."

The Hippodrome, although it may not look it, will be 13 years old this week. The principal form which the celebration will take will be a parade on Friday, that being the exact anniversary. In addition, an anniversary program will be staged next Sunday night, the benefits from which will be derived by the army, the navy, and the Stage Women's War Relief.

Not in years has there been simultaneous presentation in these parts of plays so similarly titled as "Nancy Lee" and "Fancy Free," and the playgoer who reads as he runs will almost inevitably confuse them. The coincidence, in fact, seems to offer an agreeable opportunity for a bit of light verse, which will please consider itself written.

It is to be noted that "The Land of Joy," the Spanish show which succeeded in starting something in these parts, is one of the really hugely successful road attractions. Recently, according to the claims of the management, the piece broke a Pittsburgh record which had been one of Fred Stone's prized possessions. It will begin a Chicago engagement in another week or so.

Marie Cahill, so goes the story, is about to return to the stage in a piece called "Just Around the Corner," the work of George V. Hobart and Herbert Hall Winslow. It will be seen in Chicago before it comes to New York.

Probably for the first time in its history the Eltinge will house a Summer show this year. A. H. Woods is preparing the Helton-Wodehouse-Szulc musical piece, "See You Later," and it is to the Eltinge that it probably will go.

THE NEW PLAYS

ONCE more the week will be a heavy one dramatically—probably the last week of the season to be fraught with any great dramatic interest. There will be four new pieces, including plays by two of America's best-known dramatists.

HEDDA GABLER—Tomorrow night at the Plymouth Theatre.

The second of Mme. Nazimova's Ibsen productions at the Plymouth will reveal the star as Hedda, a rôle which she has played here before. It was in this play, in fact, that Mme. Nazimova made her first appearance here as an English-speaking actress, in 1907. "Hedda Gabler" was first acted in New York in 1898 by Elizabeth Robins, an English actress, and the rôle was subsequently played here by Blanche Bates, Mrs. Fiske, and Mrs. Patrick Campbell, among others.

In the present company, in addition to the star, will be Lionel Atwill, as George Tesman; Charles Bryant, as Judge Brack; Lizzie Hudson Collier, as Juliana Tesman; Nila Mac, as Mrs. Elvested; George Probert, as Ellert Lovborg, and Charity Finney, as Berta. The play will be revived for two weeks, and will be followed by "A Doll's House."

M. Copeau's company having concluded its season, the Vieux Colombier will pass temporarily into the hands of the English-speaking drama this week. Edith Wynne Matthison, emulating Laurette Taylor, Margaret Wycherly, and other actresses possessed of playwright husbands, will be seen in a play written by that husband—"The Army with Banners," by Charles Rann Kennedy. The piece is not, as might be expected, a modern war play, but takes its title from the Song of Solomon: "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and as terrible as an army with banners?" The action passes in the thirteenth century, in the hall of a Gothic building, and the time of the action is "at the coming of the Lord."

In addition to Miss Matthison, the company will include Henry Herbert, Edmund Gurney, Ernest Anderson, Adrienne Morrison, Wallace Erskine, and Walter Kingsford.

Another stage couple who rank with the Manners-Taylors, Veiller-Wycherlys, and Kennedy-Matthisons are Charlotte Walker and Eugene Walter. It has been a long time since Mrs. Walter has appeared here in a play by her husband, but that event is now announced for Tuesday at the Hudson, when Miss Walker will be seen in "Nancy Lee," written by Mr. Walter in collaboration with H. Crownin Wilson. The piece is concerned with the adventures of a Southern girl in New York—a girl who is introduced by her marriage into a certain class of Manhattan society, but who finds it difficult to adjust herself to all the conditions of her new life.

Lewis A. Stone, who also has been absent from Broadway for quite a time, will be Miss Walker's leading man, and the company also will include Jobyna Howland, recruited from musical comedy; Ralph Kellerd, Clarence Handysides, Blanche Moulton, Marie Pettes, David Adler, A. S. Byron, and Charles Macdonald.

FANCY FREE—Thursday night at the Astor Theatre.

This is the only musical event of the week, and will serve to bring back to these shores the popular Clifton Crawford, last seen here in "Her Soldier Boy." Dorothy Donnelly, ex-Madame X., and Edgar Smith have concocted book and lyrics, and Augustus Barratt has provided the tunes. Also in the company is the dainty Marilynn Miller, who sprang into favor at the Winter Garden; the veteran Harry Conor, Ray Raymond, Marjorie Gateson, Yvonne Darle, Violet Englefield, Yvonne Gouraud, Regina Richards, and numerous others. The scenes of the piece are laid at Palm Beach.

Once again the week contains a Shakespearean novelty—Walter Hampden as Hamlet. It is a part which he has played in London, but never before in this country. "Hamlet" will be given at the Cort on Friday afternoon under the auspices of the Shakespeare Playhouse, and will be repeated on Saturday morning.

The doors of the Bramhall Playhouse, in Twenty-seventh Street, are to be opened again, this time to shelter the Henderson Players in a program of varied pieces. The first of four performances will be given on Friday night, the plays being "The Return to Mutton," a two-act comedy by James N. Rosenberg; "A Ballad of Hell," by John Davidson; "The Proposal," by Vernon Radcliffe, and "The Dragon's Claw." The Henderson Players are under the direction of Alfred E. Henderson, and have been giving performances in and about New York for a number of years.

"Mrs. Warren's Profession" has been meeting with real favor at the Comedy—to so great an extent, in fact, that the engagement has been again extended. Originally announced for two weeks, the piece concluded its fourth week last night, and is now destined to continue for another fortnight. It will then be seen on tour, and Oscar Wilde's "Salome" will be played at the Comedy on the 22d.

An event known as a Hina Festival, Japanese in character, will come to pass Friday night at Webster Hall, 119 East Eleventh Street. Michio Itow and other well-known Japanese dancers will be on the program.

The second of Laurette Taylor's Shakespearean matinées will take place at the Criterion Theatre on Friday. Miss Taylor will be seen as Katherine, Portia, and Juliet.

Tolstoy's drama, "The Living Corpse," will be revived by the German company at the Irving Place Theatre on Wednesday night.

GOSSIP OF THE STAGE AND STAGEFOLK

HENRY MILLER AND HIS THEATRE

Being Some Random Remarks by Mr. Miller on the Subject of Theatrical Managers, Plays, Theatres, Publics and Other Topics, Including the Restoration of the Gallery.

EVEN in a season which has been so prolific of new playhouses as the current one the advent of a theatre built and managed by Henry Miller stands forth as an event out of the ordinary. The reasons therefor are two in number: First, Mr. Miller's standing in the theatrical community; second, the unusual quality of the house in Forty-third Street. The important thing to bear in mind in connection with Henry Miller's Theatre is that the capital which built it has been Mr. Miller's; the "backer" who generally hovers in the distance in a venture of this sort—and not always so far in the distance, either—is in this instance mysteriously missing. The theatre, accordingly, has none of the aspects of a real estate speculation, or even a real estate investment; it is a house built by a man who loves the theatre, and, of course, it is only a lover of the theatre who is foolhardy enough to erect a theatre which is really fine.

These noble sentiments do not proceed from Mr. Miller, for, in the course of a random talk about his theatre and the plays which are going into it, he took particular pains to emphasize his high regard for commercialism in the playhouse. Ground for his own theatre was broken prior to the entrance of the United States into the war, and no one is more conscious than Mr. Miller of the acute increase in the prices of materials which followed the American declaration. His theatre has cost him a sum only a trifle under twice the estimated figure—and the Miller resources are not boundless. He is fully aware, as is the most commercial of managers, that his theatre must house an occasional big success if he would retain possession of it, but, on the other hand, he will not deliberately lower his ideals to achieve that success. No attempt will be made herein to crown Henry Miller with a halo of idealism. But certain facts are true, and one of them is that Henry Miller can be pushed just so far. A salacious play, for example, never will be housed in Henry Miller's Theatre, be the extremity ever so dire.

"I don't want to strike a holier-than-thou attitude," Mr. Miller remarked. "Neither do I claim that my theatre will offer anything new—probably it never will. But I do intend that it shall sustain, or perhaps revive, a few of the elements which have passed out of some theatres—not all theatres, mind you. Let me cite an analogy. In a shooting gallery you will find a large central target and a number of smaller targets surrounding it. The majority of persons, you will discover, are aiming at the largest target—because, of course, it is the easiest to hit. So with theatrical managers. They aim at the largest public—the public which absorbs entertainment through the eyes and the mouth. I don't blame them; it is the easiest to hit. But I like to believe that I am among those who are aiming at the smaller targets. The dramatic situation which has the confusion of bedrooms for its basis, for example, simply fails to entertain me.

"I shall produce plays not because I think that they are the greatest plays in the world, but simply because they are the best plays that I can find—or the plays which I think are the best. As a matter of fact, I don't know anything about plays. A producer of plays is like a prospector who searches for gold; he never knows when or where he will find it. Take the case of 'The Great Divide.' When we first produced it in Washington the press was unanimous in disapproval. The following week in Pittsburgh the newspaper reviews were of a character to make those in Washington seem the acme of praise in comparison. But in New York, a week later, there was never a press so unanimous in praise. The play, it happened, was a great success, but I do not pretend to say even today who was right and who was wrong.

"As for this theatre of mine, there is no mystery or special purpose connected with it—except that I wanted a theatre which would conform to my own tastes, and express some of my own ideas. By having a theatre which is mine, and mine alone, I can eliminate all discussions as to the type of entertainment to be presented in it. I have only myself to consult, and all the mistakes will be mine. In it I can do as I please, and, if I am fortunate enough also to please the public, then I shall be successful.

"Of course, there is no such thing as 'the public'—there is no such thing as unanimity of taste. But, somewhere, I believe that there is a public which likes the things that I like. It is to them that I am catering. I am shooting at the little target. Some of my friends said to me: 'Why waste money on such expensive scenery? People will like it just as well if it is a little less solid, and, after all, the main thing is the play.' But the point is that it is a source of satisfaction to me to have such a set, and perhaps it will be a source of equal satisfaction to a few other people. Surely, among the many, there will be some who will like it."

Several years ago, when Mr. Miller found himself in position to build a theatre, he went to a man who had built ten theatres in New York. With this man he visited all of the ten theatres, and at the end of that time the architect asked for a verdict.

"I'll tell you," said Henry Miller. "There are just ten reasons why you should not build a theatre for me, because I have seen just ten examples of what I do not want in a theatre."

Paul R. Allen and Harry Creighton Ingalls, who designed the Miller Theatre, had never before built a theatre. Mr. Allen is a brother of Viola Allen, and his acquaintance with Mr. Miller dates from the time when that actor and Miss Allen were playing together. One story has it that Mr. Miller, on the night in 1906 on which he first played "The Great Divide" in New York in the old Princess Theatre, at Broadway and Thirtieth Street, turned to Allen and said: "Some day I am going to have my own theatre in New York. And when I do, I'll let you build it for me."

One of the interesting points to be noted in connection with the Miller Theatre is that it brings back the gallery—being the only theatre of recent construction which has one. The newer theatres have been omitting the gallery for two reasons; the theory that the movies are now getting the quarters of the erstwhile gallery crowd, and the theory that it seemed a little more fashionable not to have one. Most of the theatres built back in the old gallery days now get around it by calling the gallery a second balcony—but not the Henry Miller. Mr. Miller's Theatre has a gallery, and a gallery it always will be.

"It is in part sentimental—my retention of the gallery," he said. "As a boy in Toronto all my theatregoing was done in the gallery, and I haven't forgotten it. Besides, what would the colleges do without the preparatory schools? The gallery fills almost the same position in relation to the theatre—I am proceeding, of course, on the general assumption that a young man is less likely to have money than an older man.

"The gallery brings you the real theatre lovers. The moneyed class, who sit in the orchestra, have other things to which they can turn; but the man or woman who climbs the steps to the gallery does so for love of the theatre. In addition to which, I did not want a theatre which had anything about it of the lecture room or auditorium. I wanted a theatre which fairly reeked of the theatre.

"It is endowed by the American public, this theatre of mine. As a kid I landed here with 10 cents in my pocket, and everything that I have and everything that I used to build this theatre with has come from the public via the theatre. But, as I said on my opening night, another theatre more or less is not very important. The real construction begins with the opening. So now we shall see."

The Miller program—the program is as distinctive as the theatre, incidentally—announces that Langdon Mitchell, A. E. Thomas, and H. V. Esmond are among the authors whose works are to be seen sooner or later at the Miller Theatre. Mr. Miller, of course, is too wise a theatrical man to believe that any set theatrical program can be adhered to; accordingly, he has made none. It is probable that Ruth Chatterton will be seen at the theatre in the Fall in a comedy by Mr. Mitchell, but it is by no means settled.

Mr. Miller even faces with calmness the thought that some day—such are the vicissitudes of the theatre—a production not his own will have to be housed within the Miller Theatre. When that happens—if it does—Mr. Miller knows only that it will be a piece which will not be salacious in character, and that it will have about it none of the attributes designed to attract a public which "absorbs entertainment through the eyes and mouth." In other words, it will be a play which aims at the smaller target.

ON SIR GEORGE ALEXANDER

ACCOUNTS in the London papers of the life of the late Sir George Alexander explain in part why an actor-manager who was so well known in England—he was one of the four or five leading figures in the English theatre—should have been only a name, and in some cases not even that, to the American playgoer. Of all English actor-managers, Alexander was the most English. At his London theatre, the St. James's, he encouraged the English dramatist almost to the exclusion of the foreign, producing a French or an American play only when there was no English piece of any sort available.

Sir George, it is true, made several appearances in America, but they took place when he was Irving's leading man, before he had carved out a real position for himself. Add to these facts the further one that the English insularity which governed his choice of his plays was in evidence as well in his acting, and you have a complete case.

In these circumstances some account of his life and of himself is not amiss. Of many columns devoted to him in the London papers, the most interesting account is contained in The Daily Telegraph. Its salient features are these:

"The loss occasioned the English stage by the death of Sir George Alexander is very real. To obtain any just impression of its importance the event has to be regarded from the threefold standpoint of what he accomplished as actor, producer, and staunch upholder of the interests of the British playwright. In this last capacity few managers have shown a more constant readiness to foster and encourage native talent. Since the memorable opening of the St. James's, on Feb. 1, 1890, under Alexander's direction that theatre has been largely run for the benefit and renown of English dramatists. The circumstance has not, of course, involved the complete banishment of foreign works. George Alexander was of far too broad and catholic a disposition even to contemplate such a measure. His love of art had nothing narrow or restrictive about it. But when the choice lay between home and alien production it was always the former which tipped the scale. In this connection it may not be amiss to quote his own words: 'I shall, perhaps, be pardoned,' he said on one occasion, 'if I reflect with some pride that since I came into control of the St. James's I have produced plays by practically every contemporary British dramatist of note, save J. M. Barrie. The list of my authors includes Arthur Pinero, Henry Arthur Jones, R. C. Carton, Haddon Chambers, Alfred Sutro, Bernard Shaw, Henry James, Comyns Carr, Henry Hamilton, Oscar Wilde, Anthony Hope, Stephen Phillips, Justin Huntly McCarthy, Walter Frith, H. V. Esmond, John Oliver Hobbes, Sydney Grundy, W. L. Courtney, Temple Thurston, Max Beerbohm, A. E. W. Mason, J. B. Fagan, Rudolf Besier, Louis N. Parker, and Edward Rose.' No wonder that the speaker was tempted to add, 'Fairly complete, is it not?' in a tone that revealed his own intense satisfaction with so comprehensive a record.

"One detected in his acting something of the same quality of insularity. He played many parts, differing widely in scope and design, but his happiest moments were, probably, those when he appeared as the well-bred, cultured, and refined Englishman, who, on occasion, could display all the fervor of the devout lover and the deep emotion of the impassioned worshipper of true womanhood. No trace of mawkishness or of effeminacy served to neutralize the effect of his charm of manner, his graceful personality. As time went on he gained, nevertheless, in force, in breadth, in authority. He was never, of course, a tragedian, nor, indeed, a strongly melodramatic actor. Even had nature gifted Alexander with the necessary attributes, his essentially English temperament would probably have held him in check. If, as Mrs. Kendal once declared, he was in his youthful days the perfect embodiment of the 'matinée idol,' certain it is the words were spoken in a spirit of whole-hearted admiration and intended as a sincere compliment. Herself a comedienne of rare ability, she had early foreseen Alexander's success in the same field. Unusual lightness of touch, a fine and seldom mistaken instinct how best to point a witty line, a pervading sense of gayety and light-heartedness combined to give to his work in this domain a freshness and spontaneity which never failed to captivate. One recalls his performance in 'The Importance of Being Earnest'—the wonderful buoyancy of his manner, the pleasant air of conviction with which he delivered the author's topsy-turvy, yet brilliant, dialogue. In the worlds of romance and of the poetic drama he also won for himself signal successes, witness the splendid work done by him in 'The Prisoner of Zenda,' 'Rupert of Hentzau,' 'If I Were King,' and, above all, in 'Paolo and Francesca.' But it was the play of modern life and modern manners which chiefly interested him, and in which the qualities of a finely edged temperament and a keenly sensitive disposition, quick to respond to any demand made by the emotions of the moment, were seen to the highest advantage.

"Some years ago the present writer enjoyed the privilege of spending a quiet and intimate evening with him in his study at Pont Street. Conversation naturally turned to a large extent on his host's professional record. There was then produced a series of elaborate and interesting balance sheets, extending over the first twenty-five years of Alexander's management of the St. James's. Fat years there had been, and lean years; the remarkable point was, however, that you could not put your finger on any single one that had not shown a profit. In any ordinary business in which orders are received and fulfilled with almost mechanical regularity, the circumstance would hardly be regarded as noteworthy; but it provided an undoubted exception to the general rule of theatrical management may be accepted as certain. Alexander, of course, had his share of failures. Who that was present on that eventful evening of Jan. 5, 1895, can have forgotten the disgraceful scene which followed the first performance of Henry James's comedy, 'Guy Domville'? a scene that extorted from one of the most eminent painters of the day the indignant exclamation, 'This is the last time I shall ever attend a theatrical first night.' Still clear in the memory, too, is the short shrift given to 'Love's Carnival,' 'Saturday Till Monday,' 'Lorimer Sabiston,' (in the latter case somewhat undeserved,) 'The Panorama of Youth,' and to 'Pen.' But of small account are these, after all, compared with the long line of brilliant successes to be found on the credit side of the story of Alexander's managerial career."

It was in January of 1891 that Alexander took over the St. James's Theatre, a house which he continued to manage until his death.

"It was a courageous thing to do," says the writer in The Telegraph, "for the St. James's admittedly stood somewhat frequently written that there is no need to traverse the ground again: London awoke next morning to the consciousness that a great play, serving to establish the fame of a great actress, had been produced on the previous evening, and George Alexander, modestly contenting himself with a part ranking third in importance, had vindicated himself as a manager who set the honor of English dramatic art far above any petty considerations by which he might quite justifiably have been swayed as an actor.

What outside the circuit of theatredom, and, although able to boast prosperous days, was a distinctly difficult house to work. It has already been shown how in its new lessee's hands it more than fulfilled his most sanguine expectations. In what manner Haddon Chambers's 'The Idler,' Oscar Wilde's 'Lady Windermere's Fan,' and Canton's 'Liberty Hall' maintained its reputation for good luck is common knowledge. With the presentation in May, 1893, of 'The Second Mrs. Tanqueray' came one of Alexander's biggest triumphs. The history of the piece has been so

"A word may fitly be said here for Alexander's work as a producer. Without attempting to vie with His Majesty's or Drury Lane in the contrivance of big spectacular effects or the massiveness of scenic display, he left nothing undone that good taste, richness of stage decoration, and harmony of design could accomplish. He had a special gift for creating atmosphere and providing the figures in a picture with what one instinctively felt to be a right and appropriate environment. The results obtained were never the outcome of haphazard method or of chance, but rather of careful deliberation and thoughtful study. Everything in his theatre was ruled by a well-ordered system; he was wont to boast that he was always three productions ahead of the one in actual use. Properties and other accessories were always waiting the company on the very first rehearsal. It is also safe to say that of the many artists who appeared under his direction not one but would gladly acknowledge the invaluable help he or she had received from Alexander toward the better understanding of a part or the overcoming of its inherent difficulties.

"As evidence of the high esteem and affection in which Sir George was held by his comrades one may point to their eagerness in making the completion of his twenty-fifth year of management at the St. James's the means of voicing their cordial congratulations and sincere regards. The ceremony took place on the stage of that theatre, Mrs. Kendal acting as spokeswoman and presenting Sir George with a handsome gold cup, together with a check for £200 to be disposed of as he might consider fit among theatrical charities. 'We are all proud of you and for you,' declared Mrs. Kendal, 'and for many reasons. First, because you are a J. P.; secondly, because of your connection with the London County Council, where year after year you have done such splendid work, work never to be forgotten. But, most of all, we are proud of you because, in spite of all temptations to act plays of other nations, you have stuck loyally to English dramatists. The pieces you have produced in this theatre have been charmingly done; not a detail that has not been scrupulously watched over; while continual evidence of care and thought and purpose, and, best of all, good taste, is to be found in all you have placed before the public. Every management has its ups and downs, but to have reached the level you have attained to would be an achievement in any man's life.'"

A Week of Shakespeare.

The Shakespeare Playhouse, as the climax of its series of Shakespearean performances at the Cort, is planning a festival week in observance of Shakespeare's birthday, which falls on April 23. Matinées will be given daily except Wednesdays, when the theatre is otherwise occupied, (the Saturday performances are given in the morning.) The plays to be presented will be "The Merchant of Venice," "Julius Caesar," "Macbeth," and "Hamlet."

MY Own United States," in which Arnold Daly will be seen at the Rivoli today, is a photo-dramatization of the substance and idea of Edward Everett Hale's "A Man Without a Country," made by Anthony Paul Kelly. Mr. Daly plays the original Man Without a Country and two of his descendants, and, as this indicates, the story of the piece continues through several generations. It is thus that Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, Aaron Burr, Stephen Decatur, Andrew Jackson, General Grant, and Abraham Lincoln are all brought into the plot. Anna Lehr is the leading woman of the play. By permission of the Government some of the scenes were taken on the old ship Constitution, and sailors and marines appear in them.

The dominant note of the play, of course, is patriotic. At this evening's presentation Mr. Daly will appear in person to speak as a Four-Minute Man for the Third Liberty Loan.

The fourth installment of the official Italian war pictures at the Rivoli this week will show scenes from the battle between the Adige and Brenta Rivers, with action in the trenches, cavalry advances, and big-gun work. Pictures of the Southwest will take the eyes of the spectators traveling, and Hugo Riesenfeld's "American Festival March" will be played by the orchestra, with the composer conducting.

"Rich Man, Poor Man," with Marguerite Clark and Frederick Wardo, at the Strand this week, is a picturization of Maximilian Foster's novel prepared by George Broadhurst, and Miss Clark's well-known motion picture style is said to have full opportunity in the part assigned to her. Others in the cast are Richard Barthelmess, George Backus, Ottela Neamith, Mary Davis, and Augusta Anderson.

An unusual picture at the Strand will be what is described as a "microscopic revelation" of the human heart in action. Another chapter of James Montgomery Flagg's continuing comedy, "Girls You All Know," entitled "The Good Sport," will also be shown. "Strange Fishermen in Russia" will be a series of scenic pictures in natural colors.

The musical program will include a novelty, entitled "Italian Salad," sung by the Halevy Octet, with Joseph Mann as tenor, in which the conventional Italian operatic finale will be satirized. Mery Zentay, violinist, will play the Paganini Concerto, and the Strand Symphony Orchestra will play Goldmark's "Sakuntale." Oscar Spirescu and Carl Eduarde will conduct.

"His Majesty, Bunker Bean," with Jack Pickford as the stenographer who thinks he is an Egyptian King reincarnated, a Paramount picture featured at the Rialto this week, is Harry Leon Wilson's story made into a screen comedy. Louise Huff will be seen as The Flapper. Jack MacDonald will play Bunker's explosive employer, and Hart Hoxie will have the rôle of "The Greatest Left-Hand Pitcher the World Has Ever Known."

Mr. Rothapfel will introduce the rest of his musical and pictorial program by a fantasie from "Romeo and Juliet," played by the Rialto orchestra, with Hugo Riesenfeld and Nat W. Finston conducting. Annie Rosmer will sing "Dreams" from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile," and the Rialto chorus will be heard in the march from "Aida."

"Friend Husband," a Paramount-Mack Sennett farce featuring Pep, the comedy cat, will be part of the week's bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theatre the following pictures will be shown: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Henry B. Walthall in "Humdrum Brown," which is about the city adventures of an ambitious small town youth, and another episode of the "Eagle's Eye," entitled "The Plot Against Organized Labor." Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below," a newspaper girl's experiences in landing a big story, and a new chapter of Chapin's "Son of Democracy," called "A President's Answer," based on the life of Abraham Lincoln.

The bill at Loew's New York Theatre and Roof this week will include June Caprice in "A Camouflage Kiss" tomorrow; Alice Joyce, in "The Business of Life" on Tuesday; Gladys Hulette, in "Mrs. Slacker," and the sixth episode of "The Son of Democracy," portraying the life of Lincoln on Wednesday; Jewel Carmen in "A Bride of Fear" on Thursday, Louise Lovely in "A Rich Man's Darling," and Roy Stewart in "The Boss of Lazy 'Y'" on Friday, Alice Brady in "The Trap" on Saturday, and Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in "With Neatness and Dispatch" on Sunday.

Motion picture stars have been mobilized for the Third Liberty Loan, and now that the campaign is on, they are speeding this way and that over the country on tours in the interest of the Government. Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, and Charlie Chaplin, after having been officially received in Washington, are expected here tomorrow to begin an Eastern drive; Marguerito Clark, just recovering from the mumps, is expected to be away on a midwestern tour for some time, and William S. Hart will work further west. Miss Pickford has already subscribed $100,000 for the loan, and Douglas Fairbanks has obtained the promise of a $100,000 subscription, according to an announcement by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Marie Dressler is scheduled to speak for the loan in Philadelphia today, here tomorrow, and later in Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Omaha, and other cities.

Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Billie Burke, Wallace Reid, Charles Ray, Doris Kenyon, Hugh Thompson, and many more will also work for the loan.

And while the stars are capitalizing their personal popularity for the benefit of the Government, the producers and exhibitors are getting under way [illegible] Special Liberty Loan films will be released, and special programs will be featured in the theatres during the drive.

David Belasco wrote an article for the current Munsey's Magazine entitled "The Movies: My Profession's Flickering Bogy," in which he expressed ideas as to how a motion picture should be made that did not harmonize at all with the practices of directors. Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Film Company, saw the article and decided that Mr. Belasco's ideas were worth a venture, so he offered him the opportunity of trying his own free hand at motion picture making. According to an announcement by the Universal, Mr. Belasco is favorably inclined and may direct his first film play after he has completed two productions for the stage now in preparation.

Among other healthy heresies Mr. Belasco in his article said that if he ever became a film director he would use "very few characters and no ensemble whatever," that he would "contrive to have the hero or heroine hold the stage alone whenever possible," that he would "aim to tell the story not by correintion of incidents, but by the facial expressions of the actors," that he would "avoid the use of 'cutbacks' and 'close-ups,'" and that he would never consider his picture "fit for public exhibition so long as it had to be interrupted by captions of explanation." Mr. Belasco also discarded in his article the customary practice of directors in taking scenes according to convenience of location, not chronologically. He said that he would "insist that the scenes be photographed consecutively and in the order of their development." He would also require that the speed of the exhibition of his picture "be regulated to fit the natural gestures and movements of human beings."

The next motion picture at the Broadway Theatre, beginning next Sunday, will be "The Doctor and the Woman," a screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's "K," in which Mildred Harris will be starred.

Without interfering with performances and without patrons being aware that the work was in progress, the concrete foundation under the last two rows of seats in the orchestra at the Rivoli has been cut away and the seats removed entirely. The effect is to make the promenado at the rear of the orchestra floor more spacious. A large gang of workmen completed the job in two nights, starting when the last performance was over and getting things in shape for the house to open the next day.

George K. Spoor, President of Essanay, has purchased from Cohan & Harris the rights for "Young America" and is now preparing the production for release.

The movies are popular in Ione, Cal. The town has a population of 1,000 men, women, and children, and $28 of them turned out in one evening, according to report, to see "The Spreading Dawn," with Jane Cowl.

S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, became a Lieutenant in the Marine Corps last week, and was appointed head of the Motion Picture Division of the corps' Publicity Bureau. He expects to leave soon for the Marine Corps camp at Quantico, Va., where he will superintend the taking of motion pctures to be used throughout the country. Later Mr. Rothapfel will visit Paris Island, Cuba, and Haiti in connection with his Government work.

Douglas Fairbanks will have three leading women in his next Artcraft picture, "Mr. Fix-It"—Marjorie Daw, Wanda Hawley, and Catherine MacDonald. Miss Daw was the leading woman in "A Modern Musketeer," Miss MacDonald played the chief feminine rôle in "Headin' South," and Miss Hawley is a new member of the Fairbanks organization.

Florence Reed of "Chu Chin Chow" will be seen in and around New York City in a film version of Edwin Milton Royle's "The Struggle Everlasting," of which Harry Rapf is the producer.

Spottiswood Aitken, who was one of the stars in "The Birth of a Nation," and Fannie Midgely, an Ince star, will be in the supporting cast of Mary Pickford's next Artcraft picture, "How Could You, Jean."

Vitagraph releases for this week are "The Business of Life," by Robert W. Chambers, with Alice Joyce and Walter McGrail; "Caught in the Web," first episode of "The Woman in the Web," with Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon; "The Home Cure," with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, and "Rummies and Razors," with Lawrence Semon.

Robert W. Chambers's "The Danger Mark" is to be Elsie Ferguson's next Artcraft picture.

Mabel Normand's latest film, "Joan of Plattsburg," by Porter Emerson Brown, will be released by Goldwyn on May 5.

Anders Randolf, Sidney Bracey, Frederick W. Peters, Mahel Wright, Catherine Tinsley, Sheila Wilson, and William Lambert have been engaged by Harry McRae Webster to support Mahel Julienc Scott and Niles Welch, co-starring in "Reclaimed," a seven-reel feature by Richard Field Carroll.

Sousa's "In Flanders Fields."

Lieutenant John Philip Sousa, who composed a war song to the late Lieut. Col. John McCrea's poem, "In Flanders Fields," printed recently in THE TIMES, received the poem originally from one of the Canadian officer's friends who gave a dinner to the American bandmaster in Montreal. The friend, D. S. Walker, asked Sousa to read the words, and said their author would be glad if he liked them well enough to make them the subject of a song.

"As I have been busy with musical work in the navy, it was only within the last month that I reread the poem and completed a setting for it," Lieutenant Sousa said. "I wrote to Mr. Walker telling him this, and he replied that Colonel McCrea was in Flanders, but no doubt would be pleased that I had composed the music for the poem. Later on, I read the proofs and had the publisher send a contract to Colonel McCrea for his share of the royalties.

"Imagine the shock I felt on reading next day that Colonel McCrea had died on the western front. My mind has been so completely taken up with his poem for weeks past that I feel that I have lost a dear friend, and there comes vividly before me his line, 'We are the dead who lie in Flanders fields.'"

A Hundred Years of Gounod.

Speaking of the "centenaries" of 1918, the Cri de Paris recently remarked that there were four such that might be celebrated this year in varying fashion, but it added that the rigor of the time would doubtless reduce for each some of the traditional ceremonies. However, the Gallic newspaper exclaimed, an artistic festival was at any rate justified in France in commemoration of the centenary of the birth of Charles Gounod. Here in New York, the actual anniversary, June 17, will be too late for observance by two opera companies now giving some of the best known of Gounod's operas.

It was in 1818 that the composer of "Faust" was born in Paris, in the Rue Saint Andre des Arts. His father was a painter and engraver; his grandfather, a distinguished artisan in iron, had the right to the title of "purveyor to the King," and was lodged in the palace of the Louvre.

The second centenary that friends of the arts would certainly greet with some observance was that of Leconte de Lisle, born 1818 at Isle Bourbon, and not to be confused with Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle, composer and author of the "Marseillaise."

THE REAL WAR ON REELS.

"Hearts of the World" Shows What the Conflict Means.

D. W. GRIFFITH presents the war—or just about as much of it, perhaps, as can be projected on the screen of today by motion picture art and mechanics. "Hearts of the World," which had its first public showing at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre on Friday evening, is not about the war, but about people to whom the war came—and for this reason it makes the war real. One can begin to comprehend the world war only by attempting in conceive of it in contrast with the world before the war, and observing, so far as is possible, its effect upon the little things and the big things of human life. "Hearts of the World" offers some actual opportunity for the conception of this contrast and the observation of effects.

Many of the recent war films have been devoted so exclusively to photographs of fighting that, for all they have revealed, the war might be limited to the scenes recorded by the camera. Others have so insulted intelligence and true patriotism with theatrical rubbish in the form of tacked-on melodrama, or have introduced such clumsy studio fakes that, if the thing was thinkable, one charitably inclined would like to give their producers credit for attempting successfully to burlesque the war.

Mr. Griffith's film is in none of these classes, however. Its scope is big enough and its execution is artistic enough to present a great deal of the war, much of its meaning and magnitude. For many minutes during the progress of the story there is no shadow of war. The carefully restricted presence of a German spy is the only suggestion of events to come, and even he does not appear until after the story has gone far enough to hold the interest of the spectators without the aid of the war. The people in the French village shown are real; one becomes interested in their characters and activities; one begins to anticipate with them what they innocently assume they will do tomorrow, and the next day, and the next; the spectator, if he lets himself forget what he knows in advance about the film, may forget momentarily that the war is coming and find himself in the state of mind of the persons in the play, entirely absorbed in their affairs of everyday life. Surely that is the state of mind that Mr. Griffith desires. He wants to hurl the war against minds in that state as it was hurled against the peaceful people of the French provinces, for in this way only can he cause an adequate mental reaction on the part of the spectators.

Mr. Griffith's idea is ambitious, and his success will vary with various people, but, "Hearts of the World," it may be said confidently, will be far from a failure with many of the thousands who will see it.

Once the war has come, the actual scenes of its incidents and those skillfully made to the order of the story achieve their full effectiveness. One would have to write columns to give any idea of them.

Mr. Griffith was happy in choosing his cast of characters for the play. All of the actors are good, and Dorothy Gish as The Little Disturber and baby Ben Alexander as The Littlest Brother make one hope that their next picture will be released soon.

Some of the play's cut-ins are tainted with the well-known dime novel style of scenario authorship, but there are not many of them and they don't stay long.

The Boston Teachers Club has started a movement to persuade motion picture exhibitors to include an educational film in every bill. Another way of putting it, according to some, is that the teachers are trying to make the exhibitors realize that there are many people who, if assured of an interesting picture of some wonder of travel, nature, science or industry, will consent to sit through, or let their children sit through, the average "feature" in order to see it.

WHOM AND WHAT SPECTATORS AND AUDIENCES SEE AND HEAR

Minute Visits in the Wings

SYDNEY GREENSTREET, in "The Rainbow Girl," accomplishes the difficult trick of playing a comic butler in a way which no other actor playing a comic butler ever thought of, and the result is that he is one of the successes of the performance. Greenstreet is one of the growing number of actors—many of them, like Greenstreet, schooled in Shakespeare—who are turning to musical comedy this season. The reason for this condition, of course, is the prevalence of musical comedy as compared with the more staid varieties of entertainment.

Greenstreet's present appearance in a musical show is his first. New York probably will remember him best for his performance with Lou Tellegen, a few seasons ago, as King Henry VIII. in "A King of Nowhere." This characterization, it happened, was on view here at the same time that Lyn Harding was giving his memorable impersonation of the same monarch in Tree's production of "Henry VIII.," a coincidence which robbed Greenstreet of much of the credit which would otherwise have been his. Subsequently he joined Sir Herbert's company to play the Host of the Garter Inn in "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and on the road a little later, when Lyn Harding withdrew from the company, he fell heir to the rôle of Henry.

He has been known chiefly as a Shakespearean actor; in his fourteen years of stage life he has played something like 100 Shakespearean rôles. He is an Englishman, and came to this country with Ben Greet in 1904, at which time he had had only a year's experience. He had been in America ever since, and has supported Margaret Anglin, Julia Marlowe, and Henrietta Crosman, among others. One of his best Shakespearean rôles is that of Touchstone, which he played when Miss Anglin and Robert Mantell made their open-air production of "As You Like It" in St. Louis several years ago.

DIANTHA PATTISON, who has been receiving general praise for her performance of Vivie Warren in the Washington Square production of "Mrs. Warren's Profession," has been on the stage only three years, and the intervals between engagements have consumed a majority of that period. Strangely enough, she is a New Yorker—the percentage of New Yorkers who enter upon acting careers seems to be considerably smaller than the percentage of folk from Louisville, Kentucky, or Chillicothe, Ohio. Her story is unusual for another reason: from earliest childhood she longed for a stage career, and her parents encouraged her in the desire.

Her first appearance was three seasons ago in a brief-lived piece, called "Secret Strings," of which Lou Tellegen was the star. The rôle was small, and the circumstances were such that Miss Pattison was compelled to play it without a rehearsal, and, indeed, without even meeting the other members of the company. After this engagement she tramped the Broadway pavements for a solid year in vain, and finally, deciding that lack of training was holding her back, enrolled in the Washington Square Players School of the Theatre. While in the school she was offered the rôle of the American girl in "Our Betters," which she played both in New York and on the road.

Her return to New York was followed by her return to the Washington Square Players, but as a member of the company, in this instance, instead of as a student. Her work in "Mrs. Warren's Profession" has brought her attention, and she is likely to find the path to histrionic fame a trifle easier from this time on.

Musical Imprints.

Richard Aldrich's historical notes to a rare program once played by Harold Bauer in New York are reprinted in Mr. Bauer's publication of that music, or of his ten adaptations of it for modern pianoforte, under the title, "Great Composers of the Past." (Boston Music Company.) These "minor poets" of a preclassical period are seven, among whom Frescobaldi was the first great organist, Froberger the first traveling virtuoso, Merulo something of both and a publisher to boot, Mattheson "roasted" Bach, as Kittel learned of him. From Muffat the mighty Handel pilfered, while Johann Schubert's influence is noted through Mozart's whole career.

Poe's "The Bells," to music for women's chorus by Nicola A. Montani, is published by the H. W. Gray Company, which also issues this musician's three "Scenes de Ballet," for piano, and a work for mixed chorus, "The Golden Syon," composed by William Lester to a text by Frederick H. Martens, introducing somewhat freely the words of familiar hymns.

"Kamassa Dvare Bhikkhu," or "The Beggar at Love's Gate," (J. Fischer & Brother,) is a song cycle by Lily Strickland to poems of Aseret Dnommah. The texts are English, flowery, but intelligible, unlike the titles.

Various Publications.

Oscar G. Sonneck, editor of The Musical Quarterly (G. Schirmer,) announces for the July issue of that periodical "A Centennial Tribute to Gounod," by Julien Tiersot of Paris. The current number for April contains an article from Henri de Curzon on Faure, who was a great figure in France in 1870, at the time of a former war, and died in retirement at 84, during the present conflict. Josephine McGill of Louisville writes of "Old Ballads" of the Kentucky Mountains and their recurrent refrains. There are essays by Orlando Mansfield on the work of W. T. Best, and by Charles L. Buchanan on Ornstein.

"Great Pianists on Piano Playing" (Theodore Presser Company,) a volume of over 400 pages, with twenty-eight portraits, is a reissue in larger form of a collection of talks with virtuosos made by James Francis Cooke, editor of the Etude. Here are Carreno, Bloomfield Zeisler, Goodson, Bauer, Hofmann, with others heard now or formerly, and among the later papers, Paderewski, Ganz, Hutcheson, Grainger, Alberto Jonas and Alexander Lambert. Mr. Cooke prefixes an interesting chapter on artists who have visited America since the days of Rubinstein.

"The Musical Blue Book of America" appears this year in a "War and Patriotic Edition," a 455-page record of activities of musicians in many cities, compiled by Emma L. Trapper, and published by the Musical Blue Book Corporation of New York. A timely feature is the inclusion of portraits such as Geraldine Farrar and Galli-Curci, Lieutenants Sousa and Spalding, Captain Ernest Schelling, and Private Grainger.

"Dancing With Helen Moller" (John Lane Company,) is an elaborate book, every second page or so a picture, with text by Curtis Dunham and introduction by Ivan Narodny. Chapters are devoted to the tyranny of clothes, to classic sculpture, to music, health, and dancing "back to Arcady."

Songs In Wartime.

The following are new songs more or less directly associated with the activities of musicians in the war:

"For Liberty and Right," (Viggo C. Eberlin,) a song of the army, by Carl Neumann.

"The Spartan Challenge," (Denton, Cottler & Daniels, Buffalo,) by Philip Becker Goetz.

"The New America," written and published by Laurence H. Montague of Buffalo.

"Our Soldiers of 1917," written and published by Thomas D. Casalo, Williamsport, Penn.

"On to Victory," by Otto H. Palm, for the Branch Mercy Committee of Rahway, N. J.

"International Anthem," composed and published by Hattie Lambert Wallenstein, New York.

"For God and Country," (J. Fischer & Bro.,) words and music by Anthony J. Schindler.

"Democracy—That's What We're Fighting For," (Presto-Bell Company, Pittsburgh,) by Ike Jutras and Arthur Price.

"The Love That Lives Forever," (G. Schirmer,) ballad by John Philip Sousa and George F. Wallihan.

"American Consecration Hymn," (Carl Fischer,) by Francis Macmillen and Percy MacKaye.

"Over the Sea to France," (I. Freedman,) by George P. Fisher and R. H. Harrington.

"Somewhere Over There," written and published by Rose Villari, New York.

"The Sacred Legion," (Carmen Company,) by Alberto Bimboni and Marcel Tucci.

"Sammy's Nos Amis," (American Music Publishers,) by Stafford Sumner, Leo Friedman, and Charles Sweetland.

"We'll Keep Old Glory Flying," (Boosey & Co.,) by A. Louis Scarmolin and Carleton S. Montanye.

"When the 3-0-5 Begins Its Drive," published by Lieutenants A. F. Robinson and L. H. Davidow.

Film Fillers.

Poetic dramatists present practical motion-picture makers with wonderful ideas and plenty of trouble, in the opinion at least of the designers of the properties, mechanical and electrical effects, and the scenery for Maurice Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird." M. Maeterlinck was as free and easy with his stage directions as he was unconcerned about how they were to be carried out, according to a report from the studio.

"If, for example," says one familiar with what went on in the studio, "Maeterlinck wished a stone to turn into a flower, he made a note of the fact and let the stage manager solve the problem. If he wished a real flesh-and-blood character to become a stick of barley candy, he jotted down a memorandum to that effect. One of the problems was that a number of tubes be suddenly turned into lilies. There could be no instant transformation, however, for the lilies must grow in full view of the audience. Another problem was to send a fifteen-foot ship of Old Father Time sailing through space from the Land of Future to Earth, laden with its cargo of souls of unborn children on their way to their waiting mothers. Still others were to provide wood that would not wet and fire that would not burn. Saucepans, teapots, and all sorts of kitchen utensils, apparently of old copper, must become transported.

"Some of the many instructions that the dramatist gave in his manuscript were impossible of accomplishment on the stage proper, but when the production was made for the screen Maurice Tourneur, the director, insisted that all directions of the dramatist be carried out. The trickery that has been accomplished by diselves, double photography blends, and the like in this picturo is mystifying."

"A Romance of the Underworld," the first release of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, had its first showing at Keeney's Theatre, Livingston Street and Hanovor Place, Brooklyn, on Tuesday evening. The photoplay was directed by James Kirkwood. It stars Catherine Calvert, Supported by David Powell, Eugene O'Brien, Edwin Forsberg, and Sybil Carmen.

The makers of motion picture films sometimes touch the strings of the risibilities in their frautic efforts to reach the nerve-centres where thrills that run to the finger-tips may be generated, and that which was intended as horrible, for exmmple, becomes humorous. How will audiences receive the scene described in the following paragraph from the advance notice of a certain (or uncertain) film?

"Do you know the most terrible death in the world? General Blanko threatens to bury one of his bandits to his neck in an ant hill and fill his mouth with honey."

The scene is referred to as one of "the breath-taking heart throbs" of the picture story. At any rate, apparently, the press agent is confident. Should the public feel complimented?

William A. Brady's work as cameraman as well as producer will be seen in his production of "Stolen Orders," the screen story taken from the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sealed Orders," according to word sent out from the Brady offices. At one period in the making of the film it became necessary for some one in a hydroplane to photograph action in the basket of a big balloon, and when the regular camera men seemed disinclined to work from the plane, Mr. Brady volunteered and "shot" the scenes himself.

"The Cross Bearer," with Montagu Love in the rôle of Cardinal Mercier, which was used by the Knights of Columbus in the recent campaign for the Catholic War Fund and which, it is said, has been indorsed by Cardinal Gibbons, has been released by World Pictures.

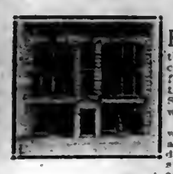
Need Stenographers

ARE YOU QUALIFIED?



EXCELLENT positions are now open to all those who qualify, not only for Government positions, but to fill the many vacancies in leading New York firms. Yet YOU can be qualified for one of these lucrative positions 30 days from the date of reading this, if you register at once with the Moon Schools. This is made possible by Boyd's Syl-lab-ic Shorthand, which is so simple that the average student writes 100 words per minute in 30 days.

The demand for stenographers is unprecedented—why waste a half year? Enroll at our risk. If, after becoming a student in one of our schools and attending for three days, you feel that it will be impossible for you to master stenography in 30 days' time, we will cheerfully return the entire fee.

MOON'S BRONX SCHOOL

The fourth Moon School is located at 370 East 149th St., near Third Avenue, Bronx (The Title Guarantee and Trust Co. Building). Established for the convenience of Bronx residents, here they may feel assured of the same method of instruction and personal attention that has led to the success of the Moon Schools. Like the other Moon Schools, it is under the direct, personal supervision of Mr. W. T. Moon. Register now for day or evening classes.

Make Your Garden Succeed

By growing vegetables you can release food for the nation. This year it is vitally necessary to make your garden bring forth a bumper crop.

Plan. Do not start a larger garden than you can see through. Choose the ground carefully. Prepare it well. Then plant the best seeds available.

FERRY'S SEEDS

are bred to grow sturdily and to bear vegetables of quality—in size, flavor, texture and tenderness. We know the history of every lot of Ferry's Seeds and we test each year's crop. Only those crops which prove their quality are offered you in the packets bearing the Ferry name.

Plant Ferry's Seeds. Do not plant too early. Do not waste seeds. It is essential to conserve seeds as well as food.

Keep your garden weeded. Keep the bugs and worms killed off. You will serve your Country, your table, your health and your pocketbook by spending the time necessary to make your garden succeed.

Good dealers have ample supplies of Ferry's Seeds. You do not need to take the dangerous risk of planting unknown seeds. Your local dealer should be able to sell you Ferry's Seeds. In case you cannot secure Ferry's Seeds locally, we can supply them by mail direct. You know that Ferry's Seeds are good. Accept no substitute.

NATION'S BUSINESS AT CHICAGO MEETING

Representatives of Commerce From All Parts of America Will Discuss War Needs at Convention This Week.

AN annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States meant little two years ago to any one save its members or the members of associated organizations. The sixth annual meeting, opening at Chicago next Wednesday, will be an occasion of national importance, bringing together hundreds of America's business leaders at a time when the war is at a crisis.

The adjustment of business to war conditions has been and continues to be an intricate problem. Even to the executives of a corporation as big as the Bethlehem Steel Company the expanding of the business of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 a year into one of $500,000,000 was a poser. That increase of $450,000,000 represents virtually the amount of the war orders. Millions have been poured into the Bethlehem Company's plants in the last twelve months almost as freely as metal into a mold. The plants, valued a year ago at $72,000,000, are today said to be worth $150,000,000. New plants built call for more hands to man them. Provision to work night shifts calls for still more. By Feb. 1, the company had need of 7,100 additional men to make guns, gun carriages, and torpedo flasks. If it did not get them, its output on that particular kind of war work would run 38 per cent. under capacity.

A man implies a home, and no homes awaited that army of workmen. The Bethlehem Company employes 28,000 men in a town of 320,000. Eleven thousand of the 28,000 are scattered through the surrounding country, some coming from long distances. Transportation facilities are overcrowded. The company acquired a tract of land and let contracts for the erection of 1,500 houses. The financial situation and the demands of excess profits tax, however, made it financially impossible for the company to carry through its plans, and it had to cancel the contracts. If the Government is to derive full benefit from the company's plants, it will have to lend its assistance in providing homes for the workmen.

Imagine that situation multiplied many times and in many places, (not always on the same scale, because all plants are not as big as the Bethlehem,) and the importance of the business man in the war is obvious. Hence the interest in the forthcoming meeting at Chicago.

All of the problems growing out of the adjustment of business to war conditions have not been solved. New ones arise every day. The chief problem now is how to produce more and faster. No one man and no one section of the country is going to find the best answer to all the questions which still want answering. A manufacturer in South Bend may have found out how to keep up normal production with one-third less men, the one-third of his employes who went to war. His opinion of handling machinery and standardization will be worth having. Another man, a New Englander, may have worked out a plan to get the same amount of power out of less coal. That information is worth having too. When they swap discoveries with each other it pays them both, and it pays the country. Such a swapping of opinions and experiences, of facts and speculation, will take place at the sessions of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Not all of the questions which vex business men today can be dealt with in the formal program and thrashed out on the open floor of the convention—there are too many of them. But there will be "asides" of comment and information, inspired by the proceedings, shot from one delegate to another; there will be luncheon and dinner conferences, and conferences while men are taking their morning shave that will send the delegates back to their homes better prepared to adjust their affairs to war conditions.

The subjects which will be discussed and the resolutions suggested by local commercial bodies indicate that business men are not thinking about much in this day except how to use business to win the war. The chamber's war work began in September, 1915, nearly two years before our break with Germany, when the report of a special committee outlining a plan of national defense was overwhelmingly adopted in a referendum vote of the chamber's membership. "For the preservation of the peace and honor of the United States" the hundreds of thousands of members of the national chamber recommended that our land and sea forces should be so increased and our industrial resources so co-ordinated as to make fully available the military, industrial, and financial strength of the nation. Since then the chamber has become a force. It has nourished intelligent co-operation among business men for the common good and has brought Government and business closer together, interpreting each to the other. Government authorities admit its usefulness, and its co-operation is invited.

Members of the Cabinet and men high in Government departments take part in its annual meetings and its work between sessions.

Some of those who will take part in the Chicago convention are the Earl of Reading, British Ambassador; Secretary Daniels, Secretary Lane, Edward N. Hurley, Chairman of the Shipping Board; Charles Piez, General Manager of the Emergency Fleet Corporation; Theodore N. Vail, President of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company; Alba B. Johnson, President of the Baldwin Locomotive Works; John F. Wallace, Chairman of the Chicago Railway Terminal Commission; E. F. Carry, Director of Operations of the Shipping Board; George N. Peek, Industrial Representative of the War Industries Board; Frank A. Selberling, President of the Goodyear Rubber Company; Wallace D. Simmons, President of the Simmons Hardware Company; Lewis E. Pierson, Chairman of the Board of the Irving National Bank, and David Forgan, President of the National City Bank of Chicago.

COLLEGE GIRLS AS ITINERANT MERCHANTS.

THE members of the Smith College Relief Unit, which is composed of Smith College girls trained in social service work, have become peddlers, ragpickers, and hucksters as part of their program of helping the peasants of Northern France to become independent again.

"Our traveling store," writes Miss Ruth Gaines, one of the unit, "laden with tinware, pots, pans, clothing, and farm implements, is no less a joy to the countryside than to us. No sooner does it honk its way into a village than women and children besiege it. We sell milk also, and chickens and rabbits and goats. We have been asked to sell the clothes from off our backs, but we have drawn the line at that.

"Another service we are trying to render, to reduce costs and foster trade, is the opening of a chain of grocery stores. In nearly every village are persons who had little shops before the war. They have neither the capital nor the courage to begin again. To them we sell staples, canned goods, tea, and coffee below cost, usually on the instalment plan. Mayors and school-teachers everywhere advise us, 'Do not give; sell.'

"One wonders, in the midst of the common misery, how the mothers keep their reason or care what happens next. But they have always the hope of the unannounced return of their loved ones. One of their requests which is hardest to refuse is for extra beds and covers against that return. It must be, too, that a disaster so universal has a steadying effect. On a smaller scale the life of the village—its work, its gossip, its petty unkindnesses, and its neighborliness—continues as of old. That we may recreate normal living conditions in our sixteen villages is the aim of the Smith College Unit in the Somme."

MILITARY CRITIC ON BIG STRUGGLE FOR AMIENS

Germany Now Staking All on Attempt to Hack a Way Through the Allied Armies to the Channel Ports and Win the War

Character of the Fighting in France Now Favors the British and French

By a Military Expert.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

IN last week's review it was stated that the plan of the Germans in their attack which began two weeks ago was, by an advance along the Oise, to split the French and British armies apart at the point of juncture and then to turn against the exposed flank of the British and roll it back to the north. With the British out of the war, the French would then be crushed and forced to make peace. There was, however, a corollary to this plan, in case the hoped-for success did not immediately follow the effort. This was to reach the coast by way of Amiens—that is, following the line of the Somme from its bend near Péronne, the Germans intended to take Amiens, push along the river with a very wide wedge to the sea, and thus force a division of the two armies which they had not forced on the Oise.

This may appear too ambitious for even Germany to attempt. But we must realize the enormous scale of the war, which makes necessary that any plan with which it is proposed to end it must be commensurate with the problem involved. The war can be ended in favor of Germany in no other way than by the destruction or dispersion of the armies of either Great Britain or France, and even that would have to be done promptly. This cannot be done by the ordinary processes of pounding their battle line with artillery and following up the artillery engagements with disastrous attacks of infantry. Such operations are but a war of attrition, and at this game Germany must lose since she is outnumbered, and the disproportion of numbers is constantly growing through the efforts of America.

To win, therefore, the armies of her opponents must be divided and beaten in detail. And it is for this that Germany launched her attack. It is a final effort to win.

AIMING AT CHANNEL PORTS.

Germany will win if she can reach the Channel ports. She would not have won had she taken Calais, because this would have still permitted the French and British to co-operate fully against her and maintain a continuous line opposed to her front. It would, of course, have given her certain advantages, but these would not of themselves have constituted victory. But if the Germans reached the coast via Amiens the situation would be entirely different. Then the Allies would not be one army, but two. The British would be located in the north, the French in the south, completely cut off from each other, without any means of rapid intercommunication or co-operation. There would be, in addition, no process by which these armies could be reunited. Each would be in every way inferior to that of Germany, and either, if alone opposed to the mass of Germany's strength, would be beaten. The Germans would be free to dig in behind the Somme, and, along one wing extending from the Somme, hold this intrenched line with a minimum number of troops, concentrate the rest against the other wing, and drive through. When the army opposed to this active wing had been disposed of, they could then turn against the other army and crush it in similar fashion. The end in such a contingency would be inevitable.

Germany, apparently, is not trying to get to Paris. The idea of Paris, the conception that the occupation of the French capital would in itself end the war, has been long since dissipated. The capital of any country is an asset, its capture is necessarily depressing to one side and correspondingly elevating to the morale of the other. Paris in German hands would embarrass and incommode the Allies, but it would not bring the end of the war. It would simply postpone it.

There is no point east of the seacoast the possession of which means victory to Germany. We must not regard this offensive as a prelude to an attempt to take Paris, therefore, but an attempt to end the war in the one way by which it can be ended—by the capture, the dispersion, or the destruction of the army of France or that of Great Britain.

The German offensive during the week followed the usual course which has marked all of the great German drives, closely paralleling in particular the battle of Verdun. After the first grand rush, progress became more and more slow, until finally it ceased. The first evidence of this was seen in the disintegration of the offensive from a general attack all along the line to localized attacks over a small section of the front, breaking out in various places. This became apparent last Sunday when the fighting centred about the village of Moreuil. The Germans had succeeded on Saturday afternoon in throwing a loop about the town, taking at the same time the wooded area immediately to the north. On Sunday, however, the French counterattacked and recaptured both the village and the woods. In the same operation the Germans pushed the point of their wedge west of Montdidier back beyond Grivesnes, bringing their lines to within a few miles of the Paris-Amiens railroad. Here also the French countered and drove them back, re-establishing their lines east of the town. The indication thus afforded of the strength that the French had mustered at the point of contact appeared to discourage further German attempts for the time being to force a way westward.

But the French were not yet finished. Close on the heels of the counterattacks against the point of the Montdidier salient, they attacked also along the southern leg of this salient near Lassigny and bent the German line backward for nearly a mile to the outskirts of Canny-sur-Matz. Just south of Montdidier the French attack agreed in Montchel and Avricourt, both of which villages the Germans had taken in the fighting of Saturday. Then came several days of heavy rain, and attacks generally ceased. The Germans welcomed the excuse to suspend operations, the Allies were glad of a respite in which to repair their defenses and strengthen their positions. Such attacks as the Germans did launch were completely broken up almost before they were started. Their efforts were concentrated in the narrow sector between the Avre and the Somme in an endeavor to find a weak spot through which they could widen the wedge at Montdidier. The only gains recorded during this interim were made by the British north of the Somme, and these were insignificant.

The most important attack of the week was that which the Germans launched on Thursday afternoon, the fighting continuing all day Friday. The attack came apparently from three different quarters—from northeast of the city of Amiens at Albert, from the east along the railroad from Amiens to Chaulnes, and from the southeast along the Avre River. The attack at Albert broke down completely without gain. From the east gains were made toward the village of Villers-Bretonneux. These, however, were not great, the greatest depth to which the British positions were penetrated not being more than about 1,000 yards. The significant element in this was that this attack was launched on Thursday, late in the afternoon, and, after the initial gain which has been mentioned, the Germans gave it up completely. On Friday this section of the front was relatively quiet. The only answer is that the results of the day before were not sufficiently encouraging to justify another attack in the same sector. The Germans, therefore, must have suffered heavily in the attack.

On the French sector the Germans were even more determined. Using nearly 200,000 men, they attacked the French lines between Montdidier and the road from Amiens to Roye, a front of about nine miles. The battle continued all day Friday and, as this is being written, is still going on. The results so far have been distinctly favorable to the French. The Germans pushed up the valley of the Avre a short distance and captured the village of Castel. This has in it an element of danger, since it draws the German lines nearer to the railroad from Amiens to Paris. But it did not materially change the situation. On all other points of the front the Germans were completely checked, whatever advantage there was being with the French, who went forward rather than back. The great strength not only of the French positions but of the French Army was clearly shown in this fighting. The Germans had 20,000 men per mile of line in this attack, but even with these great numbers the French held on. The issue, however, is not yet decided, although the punishment which the Germans received must have been so great as to discourage another immediate attempt at the same objective.

FOCH'S PROBLEM.

Much has been written about the reserve army which General Foch is assumed to have under his command, and there is much speculation as to where and when it will strike. There is not a great deal of doubt that such an army exists. If it does not, there is absolutely no way to account for the troops of the Allies which are known to be in France. They have not been thrown into the fighting yet. They are well-trained and ready for battle, so they must be there in some capacity. If they are not gathered for a counteroffensive there does not seem to be any reason for their existence. But the fact that they have not yet been used means but little. The game is a big one, the stakes are tremendous. A false move might readily be fatal. All that we can do now is to understand the problem with which General Foch is confronted, and to analyze the points which he must consider in reaching a decision.

First, General Foch must see clearly the strength of the Germans as well as his own strength. He must not guess, but know, whether he can hold the Germans back with his present reserves without drawing in this army of manœuvre. If he is assured of this then his wisdom in withholding his forces cannot be questioned. The Germans have lost a great many men in this offensive. They are losing more daily and losing them at a very rapid rate. Their attack of Friday, a major effort in every particular, while it did achieve certain gain in territory, was ruinous. In particular the French artillery and infantry decimated the German infantry. For many hours the Germans had nothing to show for the sacrifice. The longer the German attacks last, the weaker the Germans grow. If, then, Foch can pick his time and pick it without flaw, he can undo much of what Germany has accomplished in the past two weeks. If, however, he throws in his full reserve strength in an effort to check the German advance, he has played his last card. He has nothing with which to strike back, nothing with which to ward off another blow. If, on the other hand, he holds off too long, intrenchments along the vital front of his attack will lessen the chances of success. He will not strike until it is apparent that such action will bring victory.

When that time will come we have no means of judging. We do know, however, that the German attacks may be expected to continue. They must continue. Germany cannot stop. She carefully prepared the way for this attack by stupendous advertising. She announced that it was her intention to strike quickly and hard and end the war. Hindenburg was to be in Paris by April. To stop after such an effort of publicity would be to accept and acknowledge defeat.

Germany has acquired certain square miles of new territory to tear and ravish. She has acquired a certain new population to degrade and send into slavery, which she will do. But she cannot explain away the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of her soldiery by either the one or the other. She is not, as she has been in former battles, distracted by the situation in Russia. Russia is no longer a factor, no longer capable of furnishing a di-

WHERE ALLIES AND GERMANS ARE FIGHTING IN NORTHERN FRANCE

AMERICA'S FIRST YEAR IN THE WORLD WAR

What We Have Done So Far to Bring About Germany's Defeat—Foundations Laid for Military, Naval, and Industrial Co-operation.

THE Congress of the United States declared war against the Imperial Government of Germany on April 6, 1917, so that yesterday we had been at war for one year and entered upon our second year. What have we accomplished toward attaining our end, the defeat of Germany, in that first year?

Looking ahead to the time when a thoroughly equipped, adequately trained, and wholly efficient American army in equal or superior numbers can meet the hardened millions composing the great German war machine on the field of battle, drive that veteran organization before it and compel an admission of defeat; when American ships can sail the seas in safety under the protection of the American Navy despite the deadly submarine—we have a long way to go. Looking backward to the peace basis from which we started, the utter lack of any preparation on our part for a war of any size, we have traveled a long way, we have accomplished a great deal and our progress has been swift.

We have expanded our little army of 212,000 men into one of 1,652,000, that is increased it by something like 800 per cent.

We have increased our naval personnel by some 400 per cent., doubled the strength of our battle fleet and added to it some thousand miscellaneous patrol and transport vessels. We are building rapidly the greatest fleet of destroyers ever constructed by a single power, not excepting Great Britain, and we have decreased the period of construction by more than two-thirds.

Our annual production of merchant shipping was 250,000 tons; we have laid the foundations for an annual production of millions of tons, and we expect to produce a minimum of 3,000,000 tons before the end of 1918.

We have increased the personnel of our aviation corps by 10,000 per cent., we have devised and are producing what is believed to be the best airplane motor ever constructed, and we are building these and the airplanes they are to drive by the thousand.

We have raised more than six billion dollars in Liberty Loans, and have lent over four billions to our allies. We have raised an additional billion in taxes without undue stress.

We are sending abroad to our allies food, fuel, and munitions to the amount of millions of tons each month, and that they may not lack the necessaries of life we are voluntarily cutting our own consumption while devoting every effort to increase our production.

We have taken control of our own food supply. We have brought down the price of wheat from $2.50 to $2.20 a bushel, and of flour proportionately. Sugar, coffee, and other practical necessities we have made available to all at prices moderate for wartimes.

We have cut the prices of iron and other metals necessary to the production of war munitions practically in half, and insured a full supply of them to the munition factories, the shipyards, and other industries necessary to our success in war.

The nation has taken charge of its railroads, the better to insure distribution of necessities. We have reorganized our industries under Government control.

We have enlisted doctors by the thousand, and nurses by thousands more for our sick and wounded. We have voluntarily subscribed millions of dollars to the Red Cross and other national agencies providing for the comfort and contributing to the morale of our armies.

But, above all things, we have listed and catalogued in the order of their availability ten millions of putative soldiers, and all of these are under notice that at some time in the future they may be called to defend their country against the foe.

The first increments of our new armies are already fighting in France and have shown the true metal of which they are made. Our destroyers have made themselves a terror to the German submarine commanders, and we ourselves are gradually awakening to the hugeness of the effort we are called upon to make and are steeling ourselves to determination that this effort shall not cease until our triumph is assured.

We have laid the foundation and are building swiftly. This is a good opportunity to look backward for just a moment and take stock of the road we have traveled, count the milestones of achievement before going ahead again.

Here are some of the details of our progress:

THE ARMY—AN 800% INCREASE.

In this first year of war the army has been increased in actual strength from 9,524 officers and 202,510 enlisted men to 123,801 officers and 1,528,924 enlisted men. The detailed figures are:

IN APRIL, 1917.

	Officers.	Men.
Regulars	5,791	121,797
National Guard	3,733	79,713
Reserve Corps	....	4,000
National Army	....	....

IN APRIL, 1918.

	Officers.	Men.
Regulars	10,088	300,142
National Guard	16,863	421,563
Reserve Corps	96,250	77,950
National Army	....	516,869
Total	123,801	1,528,924

How many of these are in France, both in the training camps and on the actual fighting front, we are not permitted to know, because that is information which the enemy is very desirous of learning, but General Pershing only a few days ago permitted it to be announced that "over 100,000" adequately trained, fully equipped fighting men were immediately available as additions to the Allies' forces in the great battle now under way.

Secretary Baker, in testifying before the Senate Committee recently, expressed the hope that we should have in the war zone "early this year" at least 500,000 soldiers, and would be able to add 1,000,000 more before the end of the year. It is no secret, either, that the progress of training in the camps in this country has been unexpectedly rapid and that the camps are now being emptied as fast as ships can be provided to carry over the new forces.

General Pershing and his staff arrived in France on June 15, two months after our entrance into the war, and less than a month later the first division of American soldiers followed him. Exactly 187 days after war was declared our first military forces were facing the enemy on the battle line. This much the public has been permitted to know. Moreover, not so very long ago, the fact was published that our plans of organization for the first American field armies and the place they were to hold in the fighting had been completed. So that the new army is already at its business of helping beat Germany, is growing bigger and stronger every week as the nation's forces behind it gather momentum for the great effort.

GETTING OUR MEN OVERSEAS.

Getting the army under way was a big job that produced miniature triumphs of its own. Because of urgent representations made to the Washington authorities the first increments were started overseas ahead of the time expected for their departure when war was declared. The submarine peril was menacing, so every man in this force had to take along equipment for six months, and equipment then was coming but slowly from the factories.

In France there was everything to do. Docks had to be constructed, railways built and equipped and cantonments, hospitals, and a base constructed. American engineers went into the French forests and there did the work of the pioneers of our own Northwest, cutting down trees with which to build the permanent camps which were to replace the temporary cities. They built a railroad 600 miles long from the points of disembarkation to the operating base. The rolling stock it carried was all shipped across the ocean from the United States.

It was all done in rush time. An American Army locomotive was built in this country in twenty-one days and shipped to the expeditionary forces. In a few weeks after the first departures there were hurry calls for other locomotives, for cars, trucks, logging trains, sectional buildings to be assembled on arrival. All these took many ships and appreciably delayed the transport of men. There was sent everything from fabricated ironwork for buildings and trestles to nails and crossties for the railroads. Among the items of construction is an ordnance base which will cost $25,000,000.

Most of this preliminary work is now approaching completion as the first year ends. Much of it is finished. Our troops occupy trench sectors of their own in the line northwest of Toul, and in the neighborhood of Verdun. They have taken up positions also in other sectors and the main body is operating with the Allies in opposing the German advance. Our casualties from deaths in battle, wounds, accidents, and disease have already reached a total of 2,368.

10,000,000 LISTED FOR DRAFT.

Greatest of all, so far, in our military preparations has been our adoption and enforcement, without disturbance and with comparatively little opposition in spite of countless predictions to the contrary, of selective conscription—the draft.

Barely five weeks after we had declared war Congress passed the selective service law. Within three weeks more, on June 5, between dawn and dark, the male population of the United States within draft age, approximately 10,000,000 men, presented themselves before some 4,000 boards and were registered. Within forty-eight hours practically complete registration returns were recorded in Washington.

By June 20 the local draft boards were ready to begin the task of examination and exemption. Sixteen cantonments, small cities in themselves, were already under construction in various parts of the country for the reception of the future citizen soldiers. Ninety days after this work began the initial groups of this first national army were on their way to these camps. In a steady stream since then the men have been called up, organized into military formations, and put under intensive training.

The first half million is now ready, when needed, to be sent across the sea, to complete their training within the war zone and take their place on the battle front. As fast as the camps are emptied new men will be summoned to refill them, new battalions will be formed, and new forces sent forward. Another 800,000 unmarried men without direct dependents are under notice and will soon be under instruction. More will be called as needed, and thus the exodus of fighting men across the ocean will never stop until victory is achieved.

In the operation of the draft one feature, in addition to the ready response of patriotic Americans to the call for service and the promptitude with which they were enrolled, stands out. That is the economy, compared with other systems, in the cost of enrollment. Here are the figures:

Cost per registrant	$0.54
Cost per man called	1.69
Cost per man accepted for service	4.83

WHAT PLATTSBURG HAS MEANT.

With the new army are also available the 450,000 men of the National Guard, who meantime have been mustered into the Federal service and trained under their own officers. Of these three divisions, the Rainbow, (so called because almost every State in the Union is represented in its composition,) the New England, and the Sunset (Far Western) divisions have already gone abroad, and the first two have won honorable mention in the battle zone.

These had their own officers. There was none, however, to spare for the national army. The regular military establishment could provide only a handful. Two classes at West Point were graduated in advance of the usual time, but these were not enough to affect the situation.

It was saved, and the new army was provided with carefully selected, specially trained officers, chosen by merit rather than on the old system of political appointments which proved so disastrous in the Spanish war, by the general adoption of the Plattsburg training camp system initiated by Major Gen. Leonard Wood, backed by a small group of earnest civilians, as early as 1915.

When war was declared, there were already in the country some 20,000 graduates of the Plattsburg, Fort Oglethorpe, and other training camps, who had undergone at least one month's intensive military training, supplemented by military studies when out of camp. The Plattsburg organization was taken over by the War Department, and a series of sixteen training camps for officers, in which most of the earlier Plattsburg graduates were commissioned as subaltern and company officers, was opened at advantageous points, and continued until mid-August. Of 40,203 candidates enrolled in these camps, 27,341 qualified for commissions.

Thus, thanks to General Wood's practical adoption of preparedness, sufficient officers were at the cantonments to receive and command the national army when the men arrived. A second series of officers' training camps was begun in August to add to the line and staff. Approximately 23,000 candidates attended, of whom 17,237 obtained commissions. Many who failed have since been enlisted and appointed noncommissioned officers in the national army.

A third series was instituted in January this year to create an officers' reserve force. Only enlisted men were admitted, except for a limited number of students who had received military training in schools under army officers during the past ten years. About 18,000 are in attendance, and the problem of officering the new armies has practically been solved.

GUNS, SHELLS, AND CARTRIDGES.

When war was declared, the Army Ordnance Department had ninety-seven officers. It now has 5,000 in this country and abroad, and in our first year in the great conflict is spending $4,758,500,000. To its peacetime task of administering eleven small Government arsenals has been added the problem of getting quick production of shells of all calibres, rifles, ammunition, grenades, and bombs from some 1,400 private manufacturing establishments. It has acquired a total of 2,475,219 square feet of storage space, and has 2,701,880 square feet more under construction. It will require twenty-three million square feet altogether to store its supplies. It has miles of railroad sidings, all inclosed, including fifty miles of track especially built, and it handles 10,000 carloads of explosives a month, with the total steadily increasing.

The complexity of its problem may be seen in the fact that the number of items to be made and supplied to the troops will total about 100,000, ranging from the small firing pin of a rifle to a complete 16-inch gun and emplacement; or a motor truck or tractor. As an illustration, a certain gun with its disappearing carriage has 7,990 parts, exclusive of sights and accessories. A 3-inch gun battery requires 3,876 tools, accessories, and supplies which are simply part of the standard outfit of every 3-inch gun battery. Reserves of all these spare parts must be maintained and the distribution carried out with utmost efficiency under difficult circumstances.

The departments has had to create organizations, build new plants, finance them and to design as well as to manufacture not only the weapons themselves but thousands of tools, gauges, and jigs required for their manufacture. For instance, the French Government offered for our use the secret of the recoil mechanism in the carriages of its famous .75 guns. To manufacture these it is necessary to machine steel castings so accurately that they will not be off two-thousands of an inch in a distance of more than six feet.

ORDNANCE AND AIRPLANES.

Never had machinery been built in this country to work on so large a scale with such a degree of accuracy. The Ordance Department had to persuade manufacturers to undertake this difficult work, to assist them financially to built a 13-acre plant, to purchase and manufacture $6,000,000 worth of special tools, and to develop an organization to do this. The contract waa signed on Nov. 1. Today, however, the plant is completed and is turning out the recoil mechanisms.

The Nitrate Division has under construction two plants for the manufacture of powder, costing $45,000,000 each.

The Ordnance Bureau itself has provided for the army 1,400,000 rifles, has brought the production of them up to 45,000 a week, or enough to equip three army divisions; has secured deliveries on 17,000 machine guns, and brought the rate of production of them from 20,000 to 225,000 a year. It has increased the rate of production of field guns, heavy and light, from 1,500 to 15,000 a year, and is manufacturing 35,000 motor trucks and tractors to haul them and their ammunition.

It has remodeled the British Enfield rifle so that it can be produced in quantities to take American ammunition; has adopted two new types of machine guns, the Browning, heavy and light, and is beginning to produce these in quantities, and has other matters under way about which it desires to have nothing said. The Browning is believed to be the best machine gun in existence.

We entered the war resolved in one respect to win early supremacy. We were to be masters of the air on the battle front. Congress, without even a roll call, adopted an appropriation of $640,000,000, in addition to $15,000,000 already granted, to provide our army wih the best airplane service possible. The best motor engineers in the country combined their talents to provide a motor which should be unsurpassed. The result of their efforts was the Liberty motor, asserted in Washington to be superior to anything used by any army in the world for navigation of the air.

It is now common knowledge that delivery of the new motors in quantity has been delayed by various causes. The public disappointment, however, has been aggravated by such foolish and unauthorized reports as that we would have "a hundred thousand planes in France." After three years of war on the western front neither side has been able on any day to put more than 2,500 planes in the air.

Early difficulties with the Liberty motor are now being solved and quantity production of battle planes as well as of training planes is expected this Summer. When that begins, whereas there are more than seventy different types of airplane motors on the western allied front, the United States will appear with a single standardized type, which will greatly reduce the ratio of forty-seven men required on the ground by foreign services for every man in the air.

SUPPLIES IN BILLIONS.

Of all the army departments, our lack of preparedness for war fell hardest, perhaps, on the most generally abused branch of the service—the Quartermaster Corps. It is that corps which supplies almost everything that a soldier needs, except ammunition; which transports those supplies as well as the soldier, feeds him, clothes him, shelters him from the rain and endures his reproaches when anything he needs is lacking.

The declaration of war found the Quartermaster General's office without funds. Congress having adjourned without voting the Army Appropriation bill. By borrowing, by begging credit and by various devices known to the corps it tided over the interval somehow till real money was forthcoming. It has since spent $2,789,684,778, has clothed the draft armies and fed them, supplied the oversea forces with the million things they need, and there are at present few complaints of its work. The details are seen in columns of figures all running into millions.

In this first year it has spent $60,000,000 for horse-drawn vehicles and harness, more than $50,000,000 for horses, mules, and harness, and for next year estimates it will need for fuel and forage alone more than half a billion dollars.

Our casualty list, so far, has been slight—not more than a thousand wounded, besides those who have paid the supreme sacrifice. We have, however, to be prepared for many thousands of ill and disabled men. We have prepared for this.

The Medical Corps of the Army has enlisted doctors and nurses literally by the thousand. The most famous surgeons in the country have come forward in this crisis to give their services to the nation. General practitioners with large practices have given up all to answer the call. Philanthropists have been generous in their responses to appeals.

SURGEONS AND NURSES.

In addition to the work being done for the Red Cross, which is a separate institution, the Army Medical Corps has enlarged its personnel from 8,000 to 106,000, including orderlies, stretcher bearers, and ambulance drivers. Its 900 doctors before the war are now increased to 18,000. It had 375 army nurses a year ago; now it has 7,000. It had no ambulance service; now it has 6,000 drivers in training.

Reconstruction institutions are being provided here on a more comprehensive scale than any other nation at war has attempted. Already a few wounded soldiers are being reconstructed at Medical Corps hospitals. The blind, the armless, and the legless will be taught trades and professions which will enable them to support themselves. The work begins when the wounded man is lifted by a Medical Corps man from the field. Individual study will be given to each case. Professional men, nurses, and attendants from our most noted civil reconstruction hospitals have been added to the personnel of the Medical Corps for this work.

The hundreds of thousands of men taken from civil life into the army are now showing a death rate from disease below that of men of military age in civil life.

THE NAVY—ITS EXPANSION.

If you mention the navy in Washington to a pessimist who has been lamenting what he regards as our shortcomings in the war, he almost cheers up.

When we really went to war, the navy was ready. What it lacked it speedily made up. And it has made few mistakes.

It began to do its share in the war even before the formal declaration, for as early as March 12 last year, in response to the President's order, it began arming American merchantmen and fighting their battles. There was some criticism of the shells used in those early days, after one or two accidents, but that was soon remedied. And meantime the navy gathered in recruits and set about building ships and getting in supplies ready for the real war it saw was coming.

In a year it has more than trebled its personnel. As a beginning it gathered in its own reserves and also the National Naval Volunteers and the Coast Guard. Here are the figures:

IN APRIL, 1917.

	Officers.	Men.
Regular Navy	4,366	54,894
*Naval Reserves	....	10,000
*Naval Volunteers	....	10,000
*Coast Guard	....	4,500
Marine Corps	426	13,500

IN APRIL, 1918.

	Officers.	Men.
Regular Navy	7,798	122,585
*Naval Reserves	10,000	79,000
*Naval Volunteers	805	15,000
*Coast Guard	800	4,250
Marine Corps	1,380	35,000

*Approximately.

The navy was ready first and got there earliest. On May 4, twenty-eight days after the declaration of war, our destroyers arrived at a British port to assist in patrolling European waters, and on the following day Admiral Sims attended an allied war conference at Paris. The first of the regular armed forces of the United States to land in France were units of the naval aeronautic corps. They arrived on June 8. The first contingent of the army transported and convoyed by the navy was landed safely at a French port early in July.

RECORD IN CONVOYING.

Night and day since then American warships have convoyed our transports and supplies across the Atlantic and brought the ships safely back. Only one empty transport in its care has succumbed to an enemy attack.

Moreover, in spite of the difficult and dangerous service upon which they have been engaged, only two naval vessels have been sunk by enemy U-boats—the destroyer Jacob Jones, torpedoed Dec. 6, and the patrol vessel Alcedo, a converted yacht, sunk Nov. 5, 1917. The small destroyer Chauncey was sunk in collision with a British transport. The Cassin was torpedoed, but reached port under her own steam, was repaired, and returned to service.

When the war began for us we lacked, of course, many of the small vessels required for the odd jobs of a naval campaign. Some 800 craft of various kinds have been taken over and converted into the types needed, thus providing us with the large number of vessels required for transports, patrol service, submarine chasers, mine sweepers, mine layers, tugs, and other auxiliaries. Hundreds of submarine chasers have been built besides the new destroyers put into service. There are now four times as many vessels in the naval service as there were a year ago. The destroyer fleet we are building in record time will give us at least as large a fleet of this type of craft as England is believed to have.

Our battle fleet, meantime, in the absence of the German Grand Fleet, safely maintained within the protection of the Heligoland defenses, has not been idle. It has grown to twice the size of the peace-time fleet, and every ship is hard at work. As schools in gunnery and engineering they are training the thousands of gunners and engineers required for the hundreds of vessels added to the navy, and the many merchantmen furnished with arms and gun crews. Target practice in past years had been devoted mainly to practice with the big guns. Special attention during the past year has been devoted to the guns of smaller calibre, effective against submarines, and, as the Germans well know, remarkable skill has been attained in gunnery with the periscope as a target.

NEW SHIPS CONSTRUCTED.

When war was declared there were under construction, or about to be started, 123 new naval vessels. Here is the list:

Battleships	15
Battle cruisers	6
Scout cruisers	7
Destroyers	27
Submarines	61
Fuel ships	2
Supply ship	1
Transport	1
Gunboat	1
Hospital ship	1
Ammunition ship	1

Most of these have now been completed and the few remaining are well under way. Meantime contracts have been placed for 949 new vessels, including submarine chasers designed here which have done good service.

In one other respect the navy was able to do wonderful service. When the Government seized the 100 German owned ships lying in this and other ports, the German engineers believed that their vessels had been damaged beyond repair for a year at least. The commander of the Vaterland openly boasted that he would take off his hat to any American who could put the ship in shape in time to be of service.

Within six months from the time he made his boast his vessel was in running order and has since carried numbers of American troops and huge quantities of supplies to the fighting lines in France. With the other damaged ships it was the same story, and naval artificers and engineers did the work with naval officers overseeing the job.

MERCHANT SHIPS—A PROGRAM.

It is to the United States that the Allies chiefly look to repair the losses in merchant shipping due to Germany's submarine warfare on defenseless vessels in the hope of forcing her enemies to her peace terms by reason of their inability to maintain the food supplies of their populations. "The greatest need," said Lloyd George," is ships, ships, ships."

Our plans for ship construction early in the year were placed in the hands of the Shipping Board, now headed by E. N. Hurley. Congress appropriated $1,135,000,000 for this purpose and on March 1 $353,247,000 of this sum had been spent. Friction and consequent delay, however, at the outset caused vital changes in the composition of the Shipping Board. General George E. Goethals, its first Chairman, resigned after a controversy with Chairman Denman of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the construction branch of the board, over the comparative merits of wooden and steel ships. There have been other causes—labor troubles, lack of material and of building facilities, of which we had few.

Meantime the seized German ships, with an aggregate of more than 700,000 dead weight to manage, have been put in service, vessels under construction in private shipyards have been commandeered and completed, and at least three new ships planned and constructed by the Shipping Board have been finished and are now at sea. The seizure of 150,000 tons of Dutch shipping here has further added to our immediate resources, and there is news of 200,000 tons of Japanese shipping about to become available. But this only touches the fringe of the problem.

Our shipping industry had run down, until in the year before war was declared the total output of American shipyards was only 250,000 tons. The Shipping Board plans to construct 8,164,508 tons of steel ships, 1,145 ships in all, and 490 wooden ships, with a total tonnage of 1,715,000. Only a small part of this enormous total could be constructed with the shipyard facilities available, and it has been necessary to build new shipyards on an enormous scale.

PROGRESS IN SHIPBUILDING.

Volunteer shipworkers have been enlisted from all quarters, and now at 150 shipyards in various parts of the country work is proceeding at record pace. It is hoped to launch 3,000,000 tons of ships in the present year. Much of the preliminary work has been done, and everything now depends on the speed with which the task can be pushed to completion.

Here are the figures showing the actual number of ships put into the water since the Emergency Fleet Corporation took control of the shipbuilding situation:

Steel ships requisitioned on ways, completed by Emergency Fleet Corporation and now in service	85
Steel ships requisitioned on ways, turned back to former owners and now completed and in service	15
Steel ships requisitioned on ways, hulls of which have been launched	65
Steel ships contracted for by Emergency Fleet Corporation which have been completed and put into service	3
Steel ships contracted for by Emergency Fleet Corporation, hulls of which have been launched	9
Wooden ships contracted for by Emergency Fleet Corporation, hulls of which have been launched	11
Total	188
Steel ships requisitioned which are now actually in service	100
Steel ships contracted for by Emergency Fleet Corporation now actually in service	3

FINANCE—WHAT WE HAVE SPENT

We need much money to wage war, and we are raising it. We had lent to our allies on the security of their bonds $3,882,900,000 up to the end of 1917, and the amount has since been raised to $4,436,329,750. Our own expenses are not light. For these Congress has already authorized $2,064,000,000, of which one item alone, merchant shipping, accounted for more than $1,000,000,000.

Our total expenses in the past year have been more than $9,800,000,000, but about $800,000,000 of this has gone for normal activities not connected with the war, so that its total cost in our first year has been about $9,000,000,000, of which more than $4,000,000,000 has been in loans to our allies, for which we hold their bonds. Enormous as this sum is, it is less than expected, and is considerably less than England has spent.

Our expenditures for aircraft alone have amounted to more than $600,000,000. Naval appropriations, made and pending, are more than $3,000,000,000; the War Department has taken $7,464,771,756. The army's annual payroll now exceeds $500,000,000 and the navy's $125,000,000, and these items are trifling compared with the cost of ships, ordnance, munitions, airplanes, motor trucks, and supplies of every kind, to say nothing of food.

Allotments and allowances to soldiers' and sailors' dependents paid by the Government in February amounted to $19,970,548.

Bonds, certificates of indebtedness, War Savings Certificates, and Thrift Stamps issued by the Treasury up to March 12 totaled $8,560,802,052.06.

To meet our expenses we have successfully floated two Liberty Loans with total subscriptions of $6,616,532,300, and we are to celebrate the anniversary of our entry into the war by issuing a third, with a prospect that it, like its predecessors, will be oversubscribed.

We have greatly increased the income tax and have lowered the exemption limit, have imposed new taxes on corporate and individual profits, have penalized all profits arising out of the war, and have greatly increased the old levies. War taxes, customs duties, and internal revenue collections have brought us in nearly $1,500,000,000.

While the greater part of the war income and excess profits taxes are not due until June, the Treasury had collected in internal revenue taxes a total of $566,267,000 to March 12, 1918, and had sold $1,255,000,000 in certificates of indebtedness which will be receivable in payment of internal revenue taxes. The collection of the new levies has necessitated the reorganization and enlargement of the Internal Revenue Service throughout the country.

We have taken possession of and are operating all enemy-owned enterprises. At the same time, through a Federal Farm Loan Bureau, assistance is being given to farmers at reasonable rates of interest in providing the means for raising crops, needed in greater abundance than ever to feed our army and navy and civilian population and the peoples of our allies.

FOOD CONTROL AND INDUSTRY.

One of the first acts of the Administration after our war declaration was aimed at putting a curb on the rising prices of the necessities of life. Herbert C. Hoover was appointed National Food Administrator, and after long delay his appointment was confirmed by the Senate. It was criticised, but Mr. Hoover has succeeded not only in bringing down the price of such necessaries as wheat, flour, sugar, coffee, meat, and lard, but by various devices and appeals to public sentiment has brought about a voluntary reduction of consumption and a consequent great increase in the amounts of food we have been able to send abroad.

The end of the year finds the food problem still a factor in England and France, but not nearly so serious a factor as was expected last Winter.

When the present Food Administration was created in August last, the 1917 crop, in so far as productiveness was concerned, had already been planted and partly harvested. The available foodstuffs it produced were not sufficient, on the basis of normal consumption, to feed the people dependent on it, and the question of conservation became paramount. We are planting and will gather our harvest this Fall under conditions more favorable to its economic control.

So far, "wheatless days," "meatless days," and appeals for food conservation have tided us over a dangerous period. The fixing of prices under a Presidential proclamation has greatly aided, speculation in wheat has been wholly eliminated, and the prices of flour and bread have been stabilized at a reasonable level.

Hand in hand with food conservation has gone the gradual control of industry of all kinds in order to concentrate our resources on the great task in hand—winning the war. The prices of metals necessary to war industries have been brought down by negotiation. Coal and fuel oil are controlled by Government agents, and it is not believed that the suffering caused by the fuel scarcity of last Winter will be repeated.

The Government has taken over control of the railways as a means of regulating distribution. It now operates 260,000 miles of railway, employing 1,000,000 men, and representing investments of $17,500,000,000. Another weapon expected to be one of the mightiest toward winning the war is the War Trade Board, created for the purpose of cutting off supplies to Germany through the adjacent neutrals. As the struggle goes on, officials say, the work of this organization cannot be underestimated.

A year of war has brought out shortcomings and defects, but it is contended that these are no more than have been expected from a peaceful nation suddenly reorganized on a war basis.

STATE MOTOR ROADS FOR MILITARY USE

Auto Club Sending Report on Conditions to Washington Governor Favors Bill to Spend $1,000,000

Two bills of prime importance to the transportation facilities of this State and the United States Government were introduced into the Legislature last week. One was aimed to provide real and permanent benefit, being the bill introduced by Senator Henry M. Sage, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, authorizing an appropriation of $1,000,000 to keep the main highway in repair between Buffalo and New York. It was recommended by Governor Whitman, and if passed, as it doubtless will be, will place the Empire State on a par with other neighboring States which took a broad view of highway conditions during the Winter for the passage of Government transportation motor trucks and kept their main roads open. New York, although urged to take action for snow removal by the Highways Transport Committee at Washington, unfortunately did nothing, but it is said that a better record may be made next season.

The second of these two bills appears, on the face of it, as a reactionary measure. It provides, briefly, that motor trucks, with their loads, of more than ten gross tons weight be prohibited from operation on the State highways. If adopted this would prohibit the use of five-ton trucks and would seriously impair the development of motor-truck transportation. The five-ton truck weighs about that much, and with its five-ton load usually weighs slightly over 20,000 pounds. In this instance it is significant to note the greater liberality of New Jersey, where motor-truck loads of 30,000 pounds are allowed.

Road repair work as a war measure is being widely recognized as one of the prime necessities, and plans are being perfected in all of the States through which Government transport motor vehicles pass on their overland runs to the seacoast to maintain their main roads in the best possible condition. The United States Government is taking a vital interest in the highway work of the various States and it was learned last week that the War Department recently asked the Automobile Club of America for a report on road conditions from Buffalo through New York to Baltimore with special reference to the strength of the bridges.

Owing to the miserable condition of the Mohawk Valley route during the Winter, most of the army transport wagons from the western factories went to Baltimore via Pennsylvania, which kept the main trunk line free from snow. During the coming months, however, a large number of trucks will use the New York roads, and the Government's inquiry is directed toward ascertaining the best roads to the seaboard terminals as well as to the base hospitals in the East. C. H. Wells, the road expert of the Automobile Club of America, recently returned from an up-State tour of investigating and his report will be submitted to the Government this week.

For motor truck travel across the State Mr. Wells suggests two routes, one the main Mohawk Valley route from Buffalo to Albany and down the east side of the Hudson River, as generally used. The second, and which he considers preferable at the present time is from Buffalo along the Mohawk Valley road to Avon, then south to Hornell, thence east to Elmira, continuing through the Susquehanna and Chemung Valleys to Binghamton, Middletown and Goshen, striking the main road on the west bank of the Hudson just above Tuxedo, and thence to New York. From Buffalo to New York by the latter route is 403 miles. By the main Mohawk Valley road the distance is 450 miles.

The Mohawk route between Syracuse and Geneva and also in the Batavia section is in poor condition, and these stretches are in urgent need of immediate repairs. From New York to Albany, on the east side of the Hudson, there is a short strip under construction through Tarrytown which is expected to be finished by July 1, and there is another bad piece across the Astor flats between Rhinebeck and Hudson.

Mr. Wells states that all of the culverts in the State roads will support a weight of from fifteen to twenty tons.

As an illustration of the importance attached by the Government to road maintenance on main thoroughfares, the following statement from Secretary Houston of the Department of Agriculture to the American Association of State Highway officials is significant:

"So far as it is practicable to do so, this department will urge the maintenance of the highways already constructed; the construction and completion of those highways which are vitally important because of their bearing upon the war situation or for the movement of commodities, the postponement of all highway construction relatively less essential or not based upon important military or economic needs. The department is preparing to suggest to the State Highway Departments the preparation of a schedule of work for the Federal aid projects for 1918 in line with this policy."

USED IN NAVY AIR SERVICE STATIONS.

Several hundred of these three-quarter ton Rainier motor trucks are in war work here and abroad. Four cylinder motor, providing speed of 25 miles an hour, 125-inch wheelbase.

AUTO TRADE NOTES.

Charles Clifton, President, and H. H. Rice, a Director of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, will attend the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at Chicago April 10.

At the New York Schuyler Coast Defense Artillery School in the Westchester suburbs 500 men attended a series of lectures and demonstrations last week on Dodge Brothers cars, given under the auspices of Conservation Company of New York.

The Willys-Overland Company has appointed L. J. MacCracken as service supervisor. E. S. S. Carroll has taken over the management of the used car departments of the New York and local branches.

In the last two weeks twenty buyers of Oakland cars have driven their automobiles from the Oakland factory at Pontiac, Mich., to New York and nearby cities, participating in two driveaways with service station workmen employed by the Sidney R. Bowman Automobile Company, New York dealers.

The H. B. Shontz Company, distributers and central service station for U. S. L. batteries at 157 West Fifty-fourth Street, has purchased the battery stock and equipment of the Splitdorf Electrical Company, makers of the Apelco storage batteries. The latter company will discontinue the manufacture of storage batteries.

R. W. Sykes, Jr., has joined the firm of Dingutt Brothers of Brooklyn, distributers for Hupmobile and Liberty cars.

A caravan of Velie trucks, each carrying a Velie car, arrived in Cleveland, Ohio, from the Velie factory at Moline, Ill., last week.

"The shortage of farm labor and the unusual demand for horses and mules for other purposes are responsible for the increased purchase of trucks in agricultural communities," says T. Silvey, metropolitan distributer of the Kissel Motor Car Company.

The Graves Sales Corporation of 1,668 Broadway, local distributers for McNaull tires, received their first consignment of merchandise via motor truck transportation from the factory at Toledo last week.

The Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company announces that in about sixty days they will have on the market a complete line of Paige trucks, ranging from one to five tons.

H. H. Franklin, President of the Franklin Automobile Company, in a recent address on the changes occasioned by the war said that it had been necessary to insist that Franklin dealers in adjacent territory, or even territory within several hundred miles, come to the factory and drive the cars they order home instead of having them shipped.

In 1847 the first pneumatic tires appeared in New York on a horse-drawn vehicle. It is a far cry from that early tire to the modern Royal Cord tires of today. The latter tire, made by the United States Tire Company, is built up of layer on layer of parallel fishcords running diagonally across the tire, the threads of adjacent layers running in opposite directions. Each individual cord is completely permeated with rubber and entirely surrounded by rubber, making friction by the rubbing together of contiguous cords impossible.

SOMETHING NEW IN BODY DESIGN.

Convertible cabriolet type built by the Locomobile Company for a Larchmont motorist. The body is hung very low, finished in light blue with interior fittings in blue enamel.

REPORT RECKLESS DRIVER.

Suggests Co-operation by Average Motorist—City Ordinance for Brakes.

In discussing Mayor Hylan's letter against reckless motorists last week, J. B. Hulett suggests that the law-abiding autoist might do his part in keeping reckless drivers off the streets by reporting such cases to the Police Department.

"The average motorist should seek to help the Police Department in every way," he says. "By going after the reckless driver pure and simple the city administration would be getting directly at the dangerous element and would eliminate a lot of petty prosecution. The latter only irritates the motorist who is trying to do what is right but is often caught on a technicality when not in any way endangering pedestrians or other vehicles.

"The Police Department should consider that 90 per cent. of the automobilists of the city are allies and not enemies. Then it would be an easy matter to weed out the 10 per cent. that need their licenses revoked.

"The brake matter is something that can be regulated by a city ordinance requiring regular brake inspections. No owner wants brakes that will not operate efficiently when they are needed. He probably would subscribe very willingly to an ordinance requiring regular brake examinations. It would be to his own personal advantage as well as to the public interests."

Over 70,000 Autos Exported in 1917

Automobile exports last year, according to the estimates of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, even with embargoes on a great many countries, totaled 85,702 passenger cars, valued at $52,000,000, and 11,347 trucks, valued at $36,000,000. These products have gone to eighty-two different countries, in some cases leading the way for American products of any kind.

J. Walter Drake, Chairman of the Export Committee of the National Chamber, and John N. Willys, a Director, will be among the speakers at the National Foreign Trade Council at Cincinnati, April 18 to 20.

One More Toll Road Abandoned.

After an effort of nearly four years an agreement has been reached whereby the ancient system of toll-paying on the section of the Lincoln Highway between Lancaster and Williamstown, Pa., will soon be abandoned. The Pennsylvania State and county authorities have agreed to purchase the rights of the stockholders in the Lancaster and Williamstown Turnpike Company, and when that is accomplished the road will be opened, free to travel.

$5,000 FOR TRUCK SERVICE.

Merchants' Association Appropriates Fund for Return Loads Bureau.

An important step in the direction of efficient motor truck transportation was taken last week by the Merchants' Association, which voted to appropriate $5,000 to create a return loads bureau in New York City to facilitate the movement of merchandise by trucks.

This action was taken on the recommendation of the association's Transportation Committee, of which William B. Dudley is Chairman.

The Council of National Defense, through its Highways Transport Committee and its State Councils Section, is attempting to build up a system for using the highways and motor trucks for the purpose of relieving the freight congestion on the railroads. Three methods of using motors for distributing merchandise are now in operation in this city.

1. Motor truck express lines are operating over fixed routes between specified points and giving a motor truck express service to the general public through regularly established agencies.

2. Motor trucks are used on regular routes by private concerns for handling their own business. Many of these trucks return empty to their starting point, although there are shippers who would be glad to supply return loads.

3. Motor trucks operated by individuals which may be made available should demand for their services arise.

Commends Highway Snow Removal.

The Pennsylvania State Highway Department has been highly commended by the Highways Transport Committee for the efficient manner in which the Pennsylvania roads have been kept open to traffic in the movement of Government and other freight by motor car during the last Winter. Motor driven snowplows were used to keep the Lincoln Highway open to traffic over the Alleghanies, and it seems certain that a definite precedent in the matter of cold weather road operations has been established. These motor truck plows were put to work at any time the snow reached a depth of two inches, and were kept at work until the road was clear enough to permit the free passage of all travel.

STOP WASTE IN TIRES.

Estimated That 4,000,000 Tires Were Needlessly Destroyed Last Year.

Conservation of tires by every automobile driver is urged as an indispensable necessity by the manager of one of the largest manufacturing companies.

"If our rubber manufacturing companies are to have an even chance to supply the tire needs of the 5,000,000 motor vehicles now registered in the United States and of the new cars that are being turned out every day," he says, "and at the same time take care of the rubber needs of the Government, every car owner must make his tires deliver the last possible mile. The needs of the Government are paramount and must be supplied, whether anybody gets tires or not, and the most patriotic service that car owners can render is to help check the enormous waste that has been rife.

"There have been tremendous extravagance and waste in automobile tires. The amount of mileage lost each year, expressed in money value, runs into the hundreds of millions. This represents the enormous quantity of tires that were not given an even chance to deliver their full service, because of neglect, abuse, or sheer carelessness. Tire experts estimate that last year's tire loss was fully $150,000,000. Figured at $25 per tire, which is a good average price, more than 4,000,000 tires were wasted within the twelve-month period. And only two of our big tire manufacturers made in excess of this number of tires during the year.

"We are being brought face to face with the absolute necessity of conserving the nation's man power. Much of the 'service' to which motorists are accustomed could be performed by the car owner himself, or prevented entirely by a little forethought before starting out on the trip. Every tire must be kept in service as long as there is a mile in it. Our economic needs will not now permit the replacement of partly worn-out tires."

Orphans' Auto Day, June 6.

This year's orphans' automobile day will be held on June 6. The cars with their young passengers will be taken to Donnelly's Grove, College Point. It is expected that about 5,000 orphans in city institutions will be the guests of the motor car owners of New York, and an interesting entertainment program is being prepared.

The Orphans' Automobile Day Association of New York elected the following officers last week: Horace De Lisser, President; William C. Poertner and Paul B. Fuch, Vice Presidents; George H. Robertson, Treasurer; John J. Borbel, Secretary; Frank Griffin, Counsel, and Frank G. Carrie, Chairman of the Finance Committee. Offices are at the Motor Club, 222 West Fifty-ninth Street.

Motor Club in China.

The North China Motor Club has recently been formed, and has a membership of over seventy in Tientsin, while a branch is being formed at Peking. The club is open not only to Europeans, but also to Chinese motorists. There are three to four hundred motor cars in and about Peking.

BUYING A USED CAR HAS ITS PROBLEMS

Expert Advice Essential if in Doubt—Certain Things Must Be Right to Give Purchaser Money's Worth

By WM. H. STEWART, Jr., President Stewart Automobile School.

Buying a second-hand car is like the proverbial case of buying a pig in a poke, as the most important parts are not readily visible. The engine can be doctored, the gears silenced, and a camouflage of fresh paint will cover a multitude of sins. On the other hand, good used cars are hard to get, and they always command a good price.

There are several sources of second-hand cars available. One may buy a car "as is" from the original owner; one that has been taken in trade by a dealer in new cars; or one that has been overhauled and is for sale by a dealer who makes a specialty of rebuilt cars. Buying from an owner is risky unless one knows the history of the car, knows what vicissitudes it has been through and the care it has received. A car that has been run a year by a careful owner, well looked after, and minor repairs made when needed, is but little inferior to a new one. The engine bearings will have worn to a good fit and it will have fully as much power as when new. But a car of which one knows nothing will need a thorough overhauling.

In the case of dealers who make a business of handling used cars some are conscientious, as they have a reputation at stake, whereas the others—well, they never expect to see you again anyway.

No matter from whom the car is purchased it should be looked over carefully. A demonstration is always given as a matter of course. This consists of a short run around the neighborhood, starting, stopping, speeding up, and a quick run up one or two moderate hills. If the car shows sufficient power, flexibility, &c., the average purchaser is satisfied and buys the car. But the experienced purchaser investigates further.

Compression should be tried by getting out the starting handle and cranking the engine slowly by hand. Each cylinder should give good resistance in order to develop full power. If one or more are weak, they must be remedied. Where piston rings and cylinders are badly worn it is possible to use an extra heavy oil in order to restore compression.

Run the engine at different speeds and listen for knocks. The presence of a knock would indicate loose parts, carbon, or piston slap. If the engine has been overhauled all carbon will have been removed and all bearings tightened, so that a knock would indicate piston slap, which is due to wear of pistons and cylinders. This can only be removed by regrinding the cylinders and replacing the pistons and rings by larger ones—an expensive process.

Test the battery and note its condition. Turn on the lights to see if they burn at full brilliancy and do not dim much when the starter is used. Also note if the starter cranks the engine rapidly and if the engine starts readily. Watch the ammeter to see that it and the cut-out operate properly. A complete inspection of the entire electric system usually requires a skilled man. Watch the oil gauge to see that the oiling system works properly. Run the engine a few minutes and feel the bottom of the radiator. If it gradually grows warmer and then hot, you know the pump is pulling the water down as it should, otherwise the heat would stay at the top of the radiator.

Have the covers of the gear case and differential removed to see if the proper lubricant is being used. Noisy gears may be silenced for a time by using an extra heavy grease. Put the gears into low and intermediate speeds and rock them to see if the teeth are badly worn. There should be no appreciable click if the gears are in good condition.

Jack up both rear wheels and test for lost motion between engine and drive wheels. This should be done with gears in mesh. If there is much wear it will be quickly discovered.

While both rear wheels are on jacks put the emergency brake on half way. Try to turn each wheel; they should turn with equal resistance. To test the foot brake, have the demonstrator put it on while you try the wheels again. Take hold of the hubs and try to shake the axles up and down. If they are loose, the bearings are worn. Take hold of the top and bottom spokes and try to rock the wheel to see if it is properly fastened.

Put up the top and note its condition. And last, but not least, take an experienced friend with you on the demonstration.

New Motor Encyclopedia.

Everything that the automobilist wishes to know, and a great deal more than the majority of motorists ever know, is contained in the seventh edition of Dyke's Automobile and Gas Engine Encyclopedia just published at St. Louis, Mo. The book contains over 900 pages, with 3,500 illustrations, with special subjects on trucks, tractors, motor cycles, airplanes, and airplane engines. Every form of clutch, ancient and modern, every type of engine, form of ignition, plan of spring suspension, description of tire, system of electric starting and ignition is described. How to handle and care for a car, how a garage should be equipped, how to use each and all of the tools, and how to vulcanize and use the oxy-acetylene blowpipe are explained.

MILITARY CRITIC ON AMIENS STRUGGLE

version that will draw troops from the west in order to avoid German disaster in the east. Germany has the full resources of her military machine in the west. Having plunged in, Germany must stay in.

RUSSIA STILL UNSETTLED.

She herself has raised the issue. It is clearly world dominion or downfall. The result of this battle will decide which it shall be. This Germany recognizes. These are the facts she is facing and must face. She knows that she cannot dig in again and hold her lines, as she has been doing since 1914, with any slight hope of ultimate success. The longer she waits the more desperate her condition becomes. With the growing force of America before her, she must win or fail; and she must do it in this battle which she has launched.

There is still another danger for her—Russia. The situation in Russia today is not all to Germany's liking. The Russians are unsettled, they are dissatisfied with the way their peace terms are being treated by Germany, they are being starved in order that Germany may fatten. They are beginning to organize a new army to offer resistance to further encroachments on their rights. There are large elements which have never accepted the peace terms and never will. At any moment the fires which German faithlessness and duplicity have kindled may break out into a conflagration. There is no danger, at the moment, of organized resistance, since there is no organization. But there is grave danger of guerrilla warfare on a most colossal scale, which will demand many thousands of men for police work.

The Russians have taken Odessa and thereby broken the link by which Germany hoped to tie the Near East to herself and open a route to India. The Turkish fleet in the Black Sea has been driven into its nine-bound harbors. The Armenian provinces, which were to furnish great riches in oil to the Central Powers, are in revolt against the peace treaty and, with the able assistance of the Russian Army of the Caucasus, have defeated the Turks and driven them out of Erzerum. The entire Near East is in an uproar that bodes ill for the German cause should the warring elements ever join hands for the common good. The fear of Russia, if the war lasts another year, will spur Germany on to continue her attacks, no matter at what cost. This is Germany's last chance to win. If she loses now she loses all. Therefore, we may look for a continuance of this battle as long as Germany has the men to use. It makes no difference what the cost is. The attack must go on.

This, then, is the vital question: If it does go on, if Germany persists in heavy attacks such as those launched in the opening days of the offensive and again on Thursday and Friday of last week, what is the probability of the Allies throwing these back? There appears to be a bright prospect of these attacks coming to grief. Germany has lost much of the advantage she possessed when the first attack was driven forward. The degree of success attained in this plunge forward depended in no small measure on the element of surprise. The location of the attack itself was naturally unknown, even though it was known that an attack was pending. Germany can never strike again in the same way. She cannot shift her attack to another quarter, because, in order to end the war, she must win a decisive success by pressing an attack home at some vital quarter and, by such a shift, there will be a division of effort which would be fatal to a conclusive engagement. Therefore, she must strike on a front which she herself has selected and on which she has expressed her willingness to cast her lot. So any further attacks are definitely fixed within narrow limits.

ADVANTAGE WITH ALLIES.

In the same way Germany has lost the value of the initiative. The value here lies primarily in the selection of the ground, the time, the place. Germany has selected the time. She has selected the place and the ground. The Allies know when the attack is to come and they know where. But more, they either have, or soon will have, effected their concentrations to meet whatever Germany can put forward and can equal Germany man for man.

Germany is outnumbered on the western front. The margin is small, but it is still against her. Given sufficient time, therefore, there can be no doubt of the ability of the Allies to summon to a given point an equal number of men. Because of the numbers which Germany had gathered for this attack, the shifting of troops by the Allies was a serious operation. It involved inconceivable transportation difficulties both for men and material. But these difficulties have had two full weeks and more to straighten themselves out, and, because of much shorter lines of communication, the time will soon arrive, if indeed it is not already here, when Germany will be fighting at a disadvantage. Then, if there is any intention on the part of the Allies to react on a large scale, the odds will be with them.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY'S NEW LABOR DEMOCRACY

Men Themselves Will Decide How Details Shall Be Worked Out—Outline of Rules Laid Down at the Start.

WHEN the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey announced its $3,000,000 wage increase a few days ago, with the establishment of far-reaching annuities and sick benefits, and the general improvement of living and working conditions at its plants, C. J. Hicks, executive assistant to the Chairman of the Board of Directors, was asked for further details about the proposed welfare work and other plans for the benefit of the employes. Mr. Hicks is the man who worked out such details of the new system as have been decided upon.

"I'm afraid I can't tell you much," he said. "You see, we don't know much further detail ourselves."

"Haven't you any charts or tables that map out the details of what you are going to do?"

"Oh, no. Nothing like that at all. We have made out the new 'outline of labor relationships,' which has been submitted to the men's representative and approved by them. But we have no cut-and-dried schemes of welfare work. You see, the company and the men are working things out together."

With that sentence he summed up the whole idea behind the innovations. The company has raised wages; it has established a thorough-going system of pensions, benefits, and insurance; it is installing model sanitary equipment in its plants. But in all the further domain of "labor relations," in all so-called welfare work, in housing conditions, in regulations for "hiring and firing," even in future wage adjustments—in all the thousand and one things that may come up in the course of a year in even one big industrial plant—the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey is not planning to "do things for its employes." The company and the men "are working things out together."

In the matter of housing, for instance, the procedure to be followed is an example of the system upon which the welfare work will be arranged. The company has invested in the new Bayonne Housing Corporation the sum of $200,000, of which $50,000 is subscribed by John D. Rockefeller, Sr. It has employed an architect who is a well-known expert in the planning of model cottages, tenements, and workingmen's dwellings. It proposes to build the best houses possible for the men to live in—not, be it stated, as a "charity," but as a simple business plan, with a maximum profit of 6 per cent. on its investment. But the company's Directors, officers, and experts will not decide how those houses will be built. The men will decide. The architect will submit plans to the men's representatives.

"We don't know just what those men out there want," said Mr. Hicks. "We don't know the exact conditions of their lives and their tastes and the conveniences and plans they prefer. The architect doesn't know. What he will do is prepare several plans and submit them to the men. What he says, and what we say, is: 'Do you like this? Or do you like that better? Or just what do you think is best? You know what you want, so you choose.'

"That is the system upon which we are going to work out this whole thing. We cannot tell what we are going to do for the men, because we are not going to do things 'for' them in the old sense; we are going to do things with them, with their co-operation and judgment. The biggest thing that happened the other night was the meeting itself—the establishment of a joint conference that will make future decisions and adjustments. Here," and Mr. Hicks picked up a big poster notice lying on his desk, "here is the crux of the whole matter. This is the announcement of the elections. These were posted in all the New Jersey plants."

The notice read as follows:

Standard Oil Company, (New Jersey,) Eagle Works.

Announcement to Employes:

This company invites the co-operation of every employe in seeing to it that its long established policy for fair treatment of all employes in matters pertaining to wages and working conditions is maintained, and the company, on its part, desires to co-operate as far as may be helpful with each employe in his plans to provide satisfactory living and social conditions for himself and family.

In order that each employe at the Eagle Works may be enabled to thus co-operate most effectively, the company invites employes to elect from their own number, by secret ballot, men in whom they have confidence, who shall represent them in dealing with officers and other representatives of the company in matters of mutual interest, this election to be on the general basis of one representative to every 150 employes, with at least two representatives in each division of the works.

The persons thus selected by the employes will be their duly accredited representatives at a joint meeting with the representatives of the company, which it is proposed to hold at 26 Broadway, New York, April 1, 1918, for the purpose of getting better acquainted and of discussing matters of mutual concern. They will also be the accredited representatives of the employes at all subsequent meetings, and in all matters of co-operation between the company and its employes, until the employes shall designate some other person to represent them. It is therefore highly important that the employes choose with the utmost care those of their number in whom they have most confidence.

To facilitate this election employes of the Eagle Works have been grouped into divisions as follows:

Division.	Including	No. of Representatives.
First:	Blacksmiths, boilermakers, tinsmiths	2
Second:	Carpenters, painters, masons	2
Third:	Electricians, machinists, pipefitters	2
Fourth:	Common labor	2
Fifth:	Filter houses, paraffine department, stillmen, and pumpmen	2
Sixth:	Boiler and still, firemen and boiler cleaners	2
Seventh:	Cooperage department	2

This election will be held according to the following plan on the day and night of Wednesday, March 27, 1918, in order that both the day and night shifts may have an opportunity to vote.

Each employe who is a wage earner will be handed a ballot by the timekeeper, on which he will be asked to write or have written as his choice the names of as many fellow-workers in his division as the number of representatives such division is entitled to. He should name not more than one from a department, in cases where a division includes more than one department. This ballot will be deposited in a ballot box and counted by the timekeeper, and the employes of each division are requested to select one of their own number to aid in supervising the election. The result of the election shall be posted in each division, and the two or more in each division receiving the highest number of ballots shall be declared elected as representatives, provided that in divisions including more than one department, no department shall have more than one representative.

Each employe is urged to participate in this election in order that representatives may be selected as the result of a full and free choice on the part of the employes. W. C. TEAGLE, President.
Approved—A. C. BEDFORD, Chairman of the Board.
March 25, 1918.

In the establishment of a new régime in the plants—beyond the raising of wages and the allotment of benefits and annuities—this call to an election is practically all that the company itself decided upon and of itself did. As a matter of fact, the annuity plan was also approved by the men. True, there will be new houses at Bayonne—but, as has been stated, the men will decide upon the plans. True, too, an elaborate "Outline of Labor Relationships" was drawn up and accepted at the meeting on April 1. It was accepted, not by the company alone but by the joint conference of Directors, Superintendents, foremen, and the representatives of the men. In that lies the foundation of the Standard Oil "industrial democracy" inaugurated by the company. How far the idea will spread no one can foretell.

The working out of industrial democracy in the New Jersey plants includes four features that are especially conspicuous. The first is the representative government idea, as set forth in the call to the election and the establishment of the joint conference.

"Our point is," explained Mr. Hicks, "that we now have a group of men who know the needs of the plant and the men outside of it, and can tell us what those needs are, so that we can all work together to meet them."

The formal notice in regard to joint conferences in the company's "Outline of Labor Relationships" reads:

"Joint conferences of employes' representatives and company representatives shall be held at each of the works at least quarterly to discuss any matters of mutual interest. A general conference of all employes' representatives from the various works and the company representatives shall be held annually at the call of the President. At all joint conferences the number of company representatives shall not exceed the number of employes' representatives."

At the recent election of employes' representatives 92.2 per cent. of the total number of wage-earners voted.

The second outstanding feature of the new plan is that in the future all adjustments will be taken up in joint conference. The elected representatives of employers and men in the company will make all wage adjustments. The paragraph establishing this reads:

"Future wage adjustments shall be made in joint conferences between the employes' representatives in the divisions affected and representatives of the company, such adjustments to be subject to the approval of the Board of Directors."

In this connection it may be noted that a special promotions board has for some time past made semi-annual adjustments of the payment of salaried employes. The rearrangements announced and passed upon at the meeting of April 1 had to do only with the wage-earners.

The third noteworthy item in the new scheme is the assurance of justice in the matter of discharges and suspensions. Here the men will have two initial safeguards; there is a clear list of offenses for which employes may be suspended or dismissed; the foreman holds no summary rights, even against such offenders. If that is not enough to assure fair dealing, the workman has the right of appeal.

"It has long been a cause for complaint among wage-earners that they were completely in the hands of the foremen," said Mr. Hicks. "Our aim has been absolutely to do away with any such sense of injustice.

"In the first place, the list of offenses for which a man may be dismissed or suspended has been approved by the men through their representatives. They say: 'That's right: if a man does that, or that, or that, he ought to be fired.' But even so, the rule is merely that he may be discharged or suspended—not that he must be. And if he is, the foreman can't do it alone."

The section dealing with "discipline" in the outline of labor relationships is in detail as follows:

As to discharges:
(a) The following is a list of offenses for which an employe may be suspended or dismissed without further notice; this list to be posted conspicuously in each department:

OFFENSES FOR WHICH AN EMPLOYE MAY BE SUSPENDED OR DISMISSED WITHOUT FURTHER NOTICE.

1. Violation of any law:
Special attention is called to the following:
(a) Carrying concealed weapons; fighting or attempting bodily injury to another; drunkenness; conduct which violates the common decency or morality of the community.
(b) Stealing, or malicious mischief resulting in the injury or destruction of property of other employes or of the company.
(c) Cruelty to animals, the property of other employes or of the company.
2. Violations of the following safety rules:
(a) Carelessness in regard to accident and safety of fellow-workmen.
(b) Riding on standard or narrow-gauge equipment or on any moving machinery where not assigned.
(c) Running up blocks on cranes.
(d) Violation of rules governing employes in repairing or oiling of moving machinery.
(e) Failure to wear safety goggles that have been provided.
(f) Smoking or carrying matches other than safety matches, or having open lights or fires within prescribed limits where such practice is forbidden.
3. Failure to immediately report accidents or personal injuries to the delegated authority wherever possible.
4. Insubordination, (including refusal or failure to perform work assigned,) or use of profane or abusive language toward fellow employes or officials of the company.
5. Absence from duty without notice to and permission from superintendent or foreman, except in case of sickness or cause beyond his control of a character that prevents his giving notice.
6. Harboring a disease that on account of his own carelessness will endanger fellow workmen.
7. Changing working place without orders or prowling around the works away from assigned place.
8. Falsifying or refusing to give testimony when accidents are being investigated, or for false statements when application and physical examination is being made.
9. Neglect or carelessness resulting in danger to railroad equipment, or neglect of car dropper to properly set brakes on railroad cars in his charge.
10. Willful neglect in care or use of company's property.
11. Obtaining material at storehouse or other assigned places on fraudulent orders.
12. Sleeping while on duty.
13. Offering or receiving money or other valuable consideration in exchange for a job, better working place, or any change in working condition.
14. Introduction, possession, or use on the property of the company of intoxicating liquors.
15. Habitual use of drugs or their introduction or possession on the property of the company.

For other offenses not on the above list employe shall not be discharged without first having been notified that a repetition of the offense will make him liable to dismissal. Such notice may be given by the foreman, who shall forthwith send a copy of such notification to the Employment Department.

Foremen finding that the interests of the business require the suspension or dismissal of an employe for the commission of any one of the posted list of offenses, or for the commission of any other offense after warning notice has been given, shall report the case fully to the Employment Department. This department, after investigation, may approve the proposed suspension, or arrange to transfer the employe, or, if the facts warrant, discharge him after securing the approval of the Superintendent of the Works.

A list of suspensions and discharges, together with the reasons therefor, shall be forwarded to the Manufacturing Department monthly.

In fixing the right of appeal, the outline lays down that:

"Any employe who feels that he has been unjustly treated or subjected to any unfair conditions, has the right of appeal to the general superintendent and the higher officials of the company, provided that he shall first seek to have the matter adjusted by conference, in person or through his regularly elected representative, with the foreman or the Employment Department."

"You see," Mr. Hicks pointed out, "he doesn't have to go to the foreman at all if he doesn't want to. His elected representative can act for him."

The matter of assured justice in one's job is so closely connected with "hiring" as well as with "firing" that the provisions for employment come under this same item. The section on the Employment Department explains itself:

This department will be organized at each of the works, the official in charge to be responsible to the Superintendent of the works, and to have the following duties:
I. To engage all new employes:
(a) This will involve keeping in touch with the foremen and Superintendents, and being fully advised as to the employment needs in each department.
(b) Applicants should be judged from the following standpoints:
(1) Follow such limitations as to age as may be established by the Board of Directors from time to time.
(2) No discrimination to be made on account of membership or nonmembership in any church, society, fraternity, or union.
(3) Ascertain by personal interview whether applicant is qualified intellectually and by experience for the particular work under consideration. The result of such interview to be recorded on regular blanks and kept for the purpose of future record.
(4) If applicant is satisfactory in the above respects, refer him to the company surgeon for physical examination in accordance with established rules. No employe to be engaged unless he passes satisfactorily such physical examination. All cases of doubt or uncertainty in this respect to be referred to the Superintendent for decision.
II. To act as clearing house in transfers of employes from departments where work is slack to other departments needing men.
III. Employes should be encouraged to come to the Employment Department for friendly counsel in personal matters, or in case they have valid reasons for desiring to be transferred to work in another department.

The fourth outstanding feature of the new "industrial democracy" is that exemplified in the arrangement regarding the houses at Bayonne, and set forth in the first paragraph of the notice of the election. The company wishes to co-operate as far as is helpful in the provision of satisfactory living and social conditions for the employes and their families; but it is of no mind to ram such satisfactions down its workmen's throats while the workmen, willy-nilly, express their gratitude. Such a spirit, even in the slightest detail of "helpfulness" would negative the whole idea of the new plan. The workmen are to have model houses, but they are, through their elected representatives, to choose the model themselves. That is why Mr. Hicks says that he cannot tell much about future developments in welfare work. The men are encouraged to discuss personal matters with the Employment Department. The Joint Conference will take up needs and ideas and desires. Out of all this will grow the natural action that the men themselves want.

Sanitary improvements in the Bayonne, Bayway, and Eagle plants consist in the installment of complete modern equipment in washhouses, lockers, and the like.

The plan for annuities and benefits is in part as follows:

This plan shall be administered under the direction of the Board of Directors, by a committee appointed by the board, known as the "Annuities and Benefit Committee."

This committee shall * * * determine conclusively, for all parties, all questions arising in the administration of this plan, with the exception that all decisions concerning the granting of regular and special annuity allowances shall be subject to the approval of the board.

All employees of this company are eligible for retirement on annuity under the following conditions:
(a) Regular Retirement:
All men who have reached the age of 65 years, and women, 55 years, and who have been 20 years or longer in the service shall be retired on a regular allowance, unless, in individual cases, at the request of the employe, some later date is fixed by the Board of Directors for such retirement.
(b) Retirement at Request of Employe or at Discretion of Board:
Any man who has reached the age of 55 years, or any woman 50 years, who has been 30 years or longer in the service, or any man who has reached the age of 60 years, who has been 20 years or longer in the service, may be retired on a regular allowance, either at his or her request, with the approval of the board, or, without the request of the employe, at the discretion of the board.
(c) Retirement at Discretion of Board:
Any employe who has been ten years or longer in the service and who by physical examination is shown to be permanently totally incapacitated for service, or whose retirement on account of advancing years is, in the judgment of the board, advisable, may, at the discretion of the board, be retired and granted a regular or a special allowance.

The payments for regular allowances which the board may authorize under this plan shall be as follows:

For each year of active service an allowance of 2 per cent. of the average annual pay during the ten years next preceding retirement; but no regular allowance shall be less than $300 per annum or more than 75 per cent. of average annual pay.

Illustration: A retired employe whose annual pay during the ten years next preceding his retirement has averaged $1,080, or $90 per month, and whose period of service under the rules has been twenty-five years, will receive 50 per cent. of $90, or $45 per month.

The amount and duration of each special allowance shall be determined by the board.

Annuities are to be paid monthly by check to the order of the annuitant, mailed to his or her address.

Annuities terminate at the death of the employe, but the board may, at its discretion, in the case of annuitants not entitled to death benefits, continue the annuity to needy dependents for a period not to exceed one year, payment or payments to be made in such manner as the board may direct.

(c) No one retired under this plan shall be barred from engaging in any business not prejudicial to the interests of this company, but he cannot re-enter the service.

The death benefits, in case of an employe's death by sickness, shall be payable to beneficiaries in the following order of preference: The employe's (a) widow or widower; (b) children in equal shares. Payment to be made to surviving parents and adult children as trustees for the equal benefit of the employe's children. Should any child have died before the employe, his or her share shall revert in equal parts to such child's children then living; (c) parents or the survivor of them; (d) other blood relation dependent upon the employe to the extent of at least 20 per cent. of his or her wages.

In cases where no person included in the first four classes above is dependent upon the employe to the extent of at least 20 per cent. of his or her wages, the employe may, with the written consent of the company, designate a beneficiary outside of the above four classes, in which case the amount of insurance shall be $500.

Death from accident (incurred while on duty):

For employe without regard to length of service whose death is caused by accidental injury incurred while the employe was engaged in the actual performance of the duties of his occupation * * *

Upon receipts of satisfactory proof of the death of an employe eligible to death benefits, preliminary payment not exceeding $150 will be made to cover the funeral expenses; the remaining amount due will be paid to the beneficiaries in twelve equal monthly installments, unless at the discretion of the company it may appear desirable to make payment in one lump sum, or in such number of installments as may be better fitted to the needs of the beneficiary. * * *

For disability of more than seven days resulting from sickness, (including accidental injury not incurred in actual performance of duty of employe's occupation,) for all employes of one year's service, (at least thirteen weeks of which shall be continuous service immediately preceding the disability,) benefits of one-half wages, in monthly or bi-weekly installments, will be paid as follows:
(a) For employe whose term of service has been more than one year but less than two years, not exceeding six weeks.
(b) For employe whose term of service has been more than two years but less than three years, not exceeding eleven weeks.
(c) For employe whose term of service has been more than three years but less than four years, not exceeding sixteen weeks.
(d) For employe whose term of service has been more than four years but less than five years, not exceeding twenty-one weeks.
(e) For employe whose term of service has been more than five years but less than six years, not exceeding twenty-six weeks.
(f) For employe whose term of service has been more than six years but less than seven years, not exceeding thirty-one weeks.
(g) For employe whose term of service has been more than seven years but less than eight years, not exceeding thirty-six weeks.
(h) For employe whose term of service has been more than eight years but less than nine years, not exceeding forty-one weeks.
(i) For employe whose term of service has been more than nine years but less than ten years, not exceeding forty-six weeks.
(j) For employe whose term of service has been ten years and over, not exceeding fifty-two weeks.

In case total and permanent disability results, benefits for employes in class (j) will be continued for an additional twenty-six weeks. * * *

Successive periods of sickness disability shall be counted together as one period in computing the period during which the employe shall be entitled to benefits, except that any sickness occurring after an employe has been continuously engaged in the performance of duty for thirteen weeks shall be considered as a new sickness and not as part of any disability which preceded the last period of thirteen weeks. * * *

Section 1. The rights to benefits under this plan will continue only during the period that employe is in the service of the company, except as otherwise herein stated. Employes retired on annuity after the adoption of this plan, but not those previously retired, will be considered as "in the service" for the purpose of death benefits. All employes heretofore or hereafter retired by annuity will not be entitled to sickness or accident benefits. * * *

Disabled employes must take proper care of themselves, and, when needed, have medical attention, at their own expense, by a legally qualified physician. Benefits will be discontinued to employes who refuse or neglect to follow the recommendations of the company doctor.

Mr. Hicks announced at the meeting on April 1 that insurance policies to be taken out by the company for its employes would not necessarily lapse when the employe left the service, but he could continue the policy himself by paying the required premiums, without further medical examination.

The new increase of wages is stated in the following notice posted at the plants:

Effective April 1 an increase will be made averaging 10 per cent. in rates of pay, applicable to all wage-earners except first-class bricklayers and watchmen, whose rates will be increased 5 per cent., and lead-burners, whose rates were previously increased. On account of the urgent demands for output due to war conditions, beginning as soon after April 8 as practicable, and subject to supplies of material being available, the mechanical department will until further notice be given an opportunity to work fifty-six hours per week, and time and one-half will be paid for all work in excess of the present schedule of forty-eight hours per week.

The amount is roughly estimated at $3,000,000 a year. In the last two years and seven months the company has—including this latest advance—made total increases in wages averaging 79 per cent. in all classes of labor and 98 per cent. in common labor.

TRAFFIC DELAYS INCREASE.

Auto Owners Asked to Help Stop Street Car Congestion.

Statistic of increased delays to street traffic in February, due to congestion, has been compiled by the New York Railways Company and made public by Theodore P. Shonts, the company's President. The figures show that there were 3,974 delays to cars of five minutes or more, as compared with 2,819 in February of last year, an increase of 40 per cent. Practically half the delays, the report says, were due to causes over which the company had no control.

The report says that the most aggravated cause of the increased delays was that of vehicles blocking the cars. Of these cases there were 1,068 in February of this year, as compared to 601 during the same period last year.

A summary for eight months ending Feb. 28 show that there were 33,235 delays to cars of more than five minutes, compared with 15,258 in the preceding eight months. The actual time lost was double the lost time a year ago. The report says:

"By calling the attention of teamsters, automobile drivers, and their employers to the inconvenience to which the public is subjected by reason of delay to surface cars, the New York Railways Company is endeavoring to secure their co-operation to the end that the car tracks will be used by vehicles only when absolutely necessary."

GAS COMPANY LOSES CASE.

Writ of Review of Service Board's Order to Extend Mains Quashed.

On motion of William L. Ransom, counsel for the Public Service Commission, the Appellate Division yesterday quashed the writ of certiorari obtained by the New York and Queens Gas Company for a review of the commission's order directing the company to extend its mains to Douglaston. This order was issued on March 19, 1915, and the company has fought it through all of the courts in this State and in the United States Supreme Court, and has lost in all of them.

The Appellate Division said:

"Clearly this writ could not bring before us the original determination of the commission, as that order has been exhaustively reviewed by the courts. As it does not appear that the commission has abused its discretion, the motion to quash is granted."

In nearly all of the court decisions given in this matter the power of the commission to issue orders to corporations without having them reviewed has been upheld. Only where orders involve purely legal questions can a review be obtained.

For Swedish Trade After War.

The Finance Minister of Sweden has suggested to the Swedish Government that a fund be created for the operation and guaranteeing of a company to support foreign trade after the war, and especially to arrange for the importation of necessary goods. It is proposed, according to Commercial Agent Norman L. Anderson, that the company have a capital stock of $2,680,000, and that this stock be offered to a syndicate of banks which have already expressed a wish to subscribe. The stock is to be guaranteed by deposit of Government bonds.

British Wool Clip Prices Fixed.

The War Office in England announces that the price of the British and Irish wool clip for 1918 has been fixed at 60 per cent. above the average price ruling in June and July of 1914, according to a dispatch from Consul General Skinner in London. The price for the 1916 clip was based on 35 per cent. over the 1914 prices, and for 1917 the price was put at 50 per cent. over the pre-war figures. A schedule of prices for the different grades is to be drawn up by the Central Advisory Committee and this will indicate definite maximum prices.

MILLS SPEEDING UP STEEL SHIPMENTS

Large Stocks Which Have Been Piling Up for Some Time Are Disposed Of.

MATERIAL FOR SHIPYARDS

Most of This, However, Is for Construction and Equipment Work.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, April 6.—Pig iron production in March proves to have been even greater than was estimated in the trade. The monthly blast furnace report of The Iron Age shows an average output of coke and anthracite iron of 103,648 tons a day, which, with an allowance for charcoal iron, means a production at the rate of 38,250,000 tons a year. The February rate was 30,600,000 tons, and the January rate 28,750,000 tons. Blast furnace capacity is now in excess of 43,000,000 tons of pig iron a year. Three new stacks were blown in last month, while there were fourteen new stacks in 1917, and only four in 1916.

Shipments of finished steel products continue to increase as the railroads are able to furnish and move more cars. All the steel interests had fairly satisfactory shipments in March, at least as compared with the tonnage moved in January and February. One large interest shipped nearly as much of its finished product in March as in January and February put together. In nearly all cases March shipments of finished steel were in excess of production, the mills having accumulated large stocks in the first two months of the year, which they are anxious to dispose of because they are in the way. Shipments of finished steel in the last two weeks have been at the rate of between 85 and 90 per cent. of capacity, while production was at the rate of 80 to 85 per cent. of capacity. The industry's capacity in finished rolled steel is not above 2,000,000 tons a month.

The institution of monthly reports of shipbuilding furnishes a basis for making rough estimates of the consumption of steel in that quarter. In March the deliveries of vessels amounted to 166,700 tons deadweight, while the launchings amounted to 201,286 tons deadweight of steel vessels, with 31,500 tons additional in wood and composite vessels. The steel vessels consume fully one-half gross tons of rolled steel a deadweight ton, while the wood and composite vessels consume much less. The vessels launched in March, therefore, represented between 100,000 and 125,000 gross tons of steel, which of course was rolled and shipped long before March.

Ship material is moving to shipyards at a much greater rate at present than a while back. After a few more monthly reports of shipbuilding have been issued it will be possible to estimate roughly the rate at which shipbuilding is increasing. Much of the steel now being shipped to shipyards is for shipyard construction and equipment, and as this movement ends the flow of ship material proper will increase.

No Orders for Freight Cars.

No orders for freight cars are reported as having been placed thus far, following the recent inquiries on behalf of the United States Railroad Administration, which covered 50,000 box cars, 25,000 steel gondolas, and 25,000 steel hoppers. These cars will require somewhat more than 1,000,000 tons of rolled steel, which presumably will be required in less than six months.

The pig iron and finished steel markets have shown no increase in activity since the matter of prices was settled for another quarter—to July 1. Jobbers and manufacturing consumers generally are much more interested in deliveries against contracts already placed, much of the tonnage being in the form of actual specifications, than in the placing of additional orders.

There is at least 12,000,000 tons of finished steel business on the books of steel producers, apart from all Government orders, direct and indirect, but both the rate at which this steel will be required and the rate at which it can be shipped is in doubt. Shipments of iron ore from Lake Erie docks in March amounted to 1,051,564 tons, leaving 7,841,788 tons on dock April 1.

The ore movement down the lakes this season will be adjusted precisely to the actual needs of the furnaces, so that no extra work is to be done, and the mining, shipping, and consuming interests will work in harmony under a direction that contemplates making all operations subsidiary to the rail situation.

The railroad authorities are giving special attention to the matter of furnishing box cars to the tinplate industry, through the representations of the Food Administration, resulting in much heavier shipments. Last week's shipments were slightly in excess of production, which decreased a little, to 90 per cent. The total car supply was 10 per cent. above requirements, but a poor distribution left some plants with not half enough and others with more than they could use. With all that, the shipments got rid of much accumulated stock, although a great deal remains to be moved. One tinplate mill had a warehouse loaded to the top, and after building another warehouse for other purposes was forced to use it for the stocking of its tinplate.

The decision on prices by the Washington authorities means that there can be no price announced as a basis for second-half contracts other than the $7.75 price lately ruling. The contracting must be done within the next few weeks, or the trade will be greatly disturbed. While no other price than $7.75 could be announced, that price cannot be made as binding, because the Government requires that all contracts for iron and steel shall contain a clause that the price is to be adjusted to the Government steel price ruling at time of delivery, and the deliveries will all be later than the date to which the $7.75 price has been extended. A year ago the mills made the second half tinplate price about April 1, there being some question as to when the official announcement was really due. This year it is not intended to take up the matter at this time, and it may be the end of the month before the mills formally open their books for the second half contracts.

Coke Shipments Falling Off.

The records of the first quarter of 1918 show that the Connellsville coke region has fallen 662,774 tons behind the first quarter of 1917 in its shipment of coke, or at an average of 221,000 tons a month. If that average is maintained during the remainder of the year, the annual output will be but approximately 15,000,000 tons, as compared with 17,800,000 tons in 1917. However, conditions are expected to be much better in other lines during the next nine months.

Some of the ovens at the new by-product coke plant of the Carnegie Steel Company at Clairton are being dried out, and the manufacture of coke will begin shortly. The new plant, with 640 ovens, would be the largest by-product coke plant in the world were it not that the enlargement of the Gary plant from 560 to 700 ovens is nearly completed. It is the intention later, however, to double the Clairton plant, making it 1,280 ovens, and as no such plant is contemplated elsewhere the probability is that eventually and for years to come the Clairton will be the largest in the world.

The 640 ovens will carbonize 4,100,000 net tons of coal a year, producing 2,740,000 net tons of furnace coke, besides 245,000 tons of coke breeze and various important by-products. The new plant will supply the major part of the requirements of the Edgar Thomson, Carrie, and Duquesne furnaces of the Carnegie Steel Company, nearby, accessible over the Union Railroad. When the plant is doubled these furnaces will be entirely supplied, and there will be a surplus, estimated at a million tons a year, to be distributed to Carnegie furnaces accessible by a short water haul—the two Lucy and three Isabella furnaces on the Allegheny River, and the Edith and Neville on the Ohio River.

The United States Steel Corporation's coke production decreased by 1,440,267 tons in 1917 from the previous year, due wholly to inadequacy of transportation furnished by the railroads, and the output of pig iron decreased by a still larger amount, because with irregular working of furnaces the coke consumption per ton of pig iron increased. The Clairton plant will have a coke producing capacity about double the 1917 deficit in coke.

The Pittsburgh Coal Producers' Association, representing over 90 per cent. of the coal mines in the Pittsburgh district, are solidly against the proposed transfer of the control of the Bureau of Mines from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, and have asked United States Senators Penrose and Knox to take care of their interests at Washington. One of the most important stations of the Bureau of Mines is located here under the direction of Van H. Manning.

Industrial corporations which have been obtaining part of their coal from wagon mines lately have notified the owners of these that in the future they will purchase their coal from larger operators. This action has caused much disappointment and dissatisfaction among the wagon mine owners, and they have appealed to district representatives and the Fuel Administration.

Coal is very plentiful now and with river conditions in good shape and railroad transportation getting better all the time, the market is in good shape.

PUBLIC SERVICE HEARINGS.

The Public Service Commission will hold the following hearings this week:

Tomorrow, at 10:30 o'clock, on the application of the New York & Queens County Railway Company to suspend operation of cars on the Flushing Meadows between Summit and Jackson Avenues, in Queens; and concerning a complaint made by Harry C. Mahnken of the service on the Broadway surface railroad. At 2:30 o'clock, on the applications of the surface railroads for authority to charge 2 cents for transfers, and in reference to the refusal of the Edison Company to supply owners of private electric plants with emergency service.

Tuesday, at 10:30 o'clock, in reference to the applications of transfer charges of all the surface railroads in the city.

Wednesday, at 2:30 o'clock, inquiry into the failure of the Brooklyn and New York Edison Companies to comply with the uniform system of accounts established by the commission, quality and pressure of gas of the various gas companies.

Thursday, at 10:30 o'clock, inquiry into complaints concerning the rates charged for electric current by the Flatbush Gas Company.

Friday, at 10:30 o'clock, inquiry into the rates charged for gas by the Newtown, Woodhaven, and Bronx Gas Companies; and concerning an application made by the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company for approval of temporary operation over the New York Connecting and Pennsylvania Tunnel and Terminal Railroads.

Foreign Trade Convention.

The part of foreign trade in winning the war will be the theme of the fifth National Foreign Trade Convention, which will bring together many of America's leading manufacturers and shipping men at Cincinnati on April 18, 19, and 20. The convention will be called to order by James A. Farrell, Chairman of the National Foreign Trade Council. Several Government officials have been assigned by the Secretary of State to attend the convention, among them being Julius G. Lay, ex-Consul General at Berlin, who was formerly an acting trade adviser at Rio de Janeiro, Canton, and Cape Town. Also present will be Burwell S. Cutler, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and several other representatives of that bureau.

Linen in Best Wash Dresses.

In the better grade wash dresses, it is said that linen is proving very popular with the Spring trade. According to reports from local manufacturers, it is taken in unbleached and in white, as well as in a number of bright colors. Rather simple styles are preferred, and trimmings in a shade contrasting with the body of the dress are liked. There is quite some hand embroidery used for decoration on many of these garments, which are worn with a sash drawing them in around the waist in a semi-fitted effect.

Bituminous Schist as Fuel.

Experiments conducted in Montevideo, Uruguay, to discover the practicability of bituminous schist as a substitute for fuel oil in electric plants, show that there are 9,500 calories per cubic meter in the schist as compared with 10,000 in fuel oil. According to Chargé d'Affaires Craig W. Wadsworth in Montevideo, the oil obtained from bituminous schist has been tried with good results in semi-Diesel engines.

Forbids Use of Hooks on Goods.

Customs officials in Ecuador have been directed by the Government to forbid the use of hooks in the handling of goods while under Government control, according to a dispatch from the American Commercial Attaché in Peru. Any employe violating the order is to be immediately discharged.

Welcome the Liberty Loan.

The stock market gave an enthusiastic welcome to the launching of the Liberty Loan campaign, displaying more strength in yesterday's short session than had been witnessed in a long time. Gains among the more active stocks, running from 2 to 4 points, probably were assisted somewhat by the war news, especially General Foch's confident opinion, but the Street had all ears for the Liberty bond sale. There were few stocks which failed to gain ground.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

Splendid rains over the entire wheat belt west of the Mississippi River, extending from the Gulf to the Canadian border, were looked upon as highly favorable for the best interests of the new wheat crop. Apparently the crop is getting started under unusually auspicious conditions, and while many things may yet happen before the wheat is harvested, every gain at this time is just so much in favor of a large harvest. Receipts at primary points continued light throughout the week and apparently farmers are not marketing their grain with any more freedom, although the efforts of the Food Administration to bring about improvement in this respect may become evident next week.

RYE.

The local rye market was neglected and prices were entirely nominal.

CORN.

Interest in the corn market is centred almost entirely on the proposed new contract in the West where the Chicago Board of Trade was voting on the question of a radical change. The new contract provides for the delivery of No. 4 corn containing 15.5 per cent. of moisture and also removes the maximum price. Trading in this contract, however, will not be inaugurated until some future date to be decided upon by the Board and will not affect the old contract. It seemed to be the prevailing impression that trading will be started either in the June or July position and that the price will be somewhere around $1.40. In the local cash market kiln-dried No. 3 yellow was quoted at $2.00¾; No. 4 yellow, $1.93¾; No. 3 white, $2.20¾, cost and freight New York; Argentine corn, $2.50, free on board cars.

OATS.

Sentiment in the oats market was divided between the good cash demand both for domestic use and for export and the very favorable prospects for the new crop. The market on Saturday was feverish, and after moving nervously within a range of about ¾c, closed ⅛c to ¼c net higher. The local cash market was quiet; natural quoted at $1.01 to $1.05; clipped white, $1.05 to $1.07, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was inactive, and after showing slight hesitation at the start prices were firmer on covering by recent sellers and prompted by predictions of smaller receipts of hogs next week. The hog market was steady and about unchanged, although from 30 to 60 points higher for the week. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 17,000; estimated for Monday, 50,000, and for next week, 190,000; Kansas City received 2,000 and Omaha 7,500 hogs.

COTTONSEED OIL.

The market for cottonseed oil was entirely neglected and in the absence of business no quotations were made for the day. The spot trade was inactive, although prices were steady.

COFFEE.

The market for coffee futures opened unchanged to a decline of 2 points, but trading was very quiet. Commission houses again appeared on the buying side with offerings light, the trade seeming disposed to await developments. The market closed irregular, 1 point net higher to 1 point net lower. The spot position remained unchanged, prices being firmly held and business of moderate proportions only.

The cable from Brazil to the Exchange here showed little change in conditions there, the Rio and Santos spot markets being unchanged, while the Santos futures market was unchanged to an advance of 25 reis. Receipts at the two ports were 23,000 bags against 28,000 for the two days a year ago.

SUGAR.

In refined sugar the East seems to be fairly well taken care of and the demand from consumers is not so urgent. Where buyers have been willing to take soft sugar they have usually been able to secure granulated also. Some refiners have been able to supply sugar more freely than others owing to the irregular arrival of raw supplies and the consequent checking of the operation of the plants. There is still a scarcity of sugar in Pittsburgh and points west.

No change was reported in raw sugar. The total receipts in Cuba to March 31 were 1,713,678 tons, exports 816,832 tons, and stocks 862,446 tons. Cable advices report fair weather, with 196 mills in operation.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 5,367 packages. Home demand light, but exporters are showing a little interest, and the market is without material change. Tone is slightly unsettled, with weakness shown on the lower grades. Creamery, higher scoring than extras, a pound, 41½@42c; extras, 92 score, 40½@41c; firsts, 88 to 91 score, 39½@40½c; seconds, 83 to 87 score, 37½@39c; thirds, 36@37c; creamery, unsalted, higher scoring than extras, 42½@43c; extras, 41½@42c; firsts, 39½@41c; seconds, 38@39c; creamery, held, as to quality, 34@40c; State dairy, tubs, finest, 40½@41c; good to prime, 38@40c; common to fair, 34@37½c; renovated, extras, 38½@39c; firsts, 37@38c; lower grades, 34@36c; ladles, current make, firsts, 34@35c; seconds, 33c; lower grades, 31@32½c; packing stock, current make, No. 1, 33½c; No. 2, 32½@33c; lower grades, 28@32c.

EGGS.—Receipts, 32,122 cases. The market closes with heavy accumulations, quiet trade, and a somewhat demoralized situation. The general conditions are the same as lately reported. Much of the stock coming in is above cost of present values here, and is going directly to warehouses for owners' account. The quantity of stock urgently offering is, however, larger than can be promptly moved, and prices averaged lower. The quotations are full high as a selling basis, but much of the high-grade stock cannot be bought at top figures. Nearby white eggs are still in liberal supply, and a good deal of stock will have to be carried over in first hands. There is some buying for cold storage, but most local dealers are holding off, and only very closely selected marks reach top quotations; the greater part of the business is in bunches of mixed marks at 36@38c. Fresh gathered extras, a dozen, 37@38c; average packed firsts, 35½@36½c; regular packed extra firsts, 34½@35½c; regular packed firsts, 31½@33c; seconds, 30@31½c; fresh gathered dirties, No. 1, 31@31½c; No. 2 and poorer, 30@30½c; fresh gathered checks, ordinary to choice, dry, 29@30½c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby Western hennery whites, fine to fancy, 39@40c; ordinary to prime, 37@38c; gathered whites, ordinary to fine, 36@38c; Western and Southern, gathered whites, 36@38c; State, Pennsylvania, and nearby hennery browns, 37@38c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 33½@35½c; duck eggs, 45@55c; goose eggs, a dozen, 60@70c.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Rise in a Brisk Session—Excess Reserves Off Once More.

Although little use has been made in preparation for the current Liberty Loan campaign of the old argument that it was highly desirable to have an active stock market to facilitate the placing of bonds, stocks made a creditable display of strength yesterday, with a larger total of transactions for the two-hour session than was recorded in either of the two preceding full-length days. The market was unusually broad for a Saturday session coming at the end of a very dull week, and most issues closed from small fractions to several points above Friday's final prices. The movement in some of the industrial issues was so pronounced as to indicate a marked change in sentiment as affected by the progress of the war. Steel made a gain of 1½ points on a fairly large turnover, Pullman advanced 2¾, International Harvester of New Jersey 2¼, and American Tobacco 4½. Several of the railroad and equipment stocks were also in better demand, with the two leading shipping issues both showing renewed activity and strength. The signing of the War Finance Corporation bill, carrying authority for the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of bonds for the assistance of industries requiring capital for war purposes, was a helpful factor, as it is expected that the new agency of Government co-ordination with private business will remove some of the principal difficulties which corporations have been meeting with the security markets practically closed to them.

The war news continues, on the whole, favorable, with the British position growing stronger as the offensive wears out its strength. The belief is held in some quarters in the financial district that the Allies have withstood this tremendous pressure from the enemy without utilizing by any means all of the possible units, from which it is reasoned that at the proper moment a counter-offensive may be launched that will put a radically different aspect on the relative position of the opposing forces.

The third Liberty Loan campaign started yesterday under much more favorable auspices than accompanied the beginning of either of the two previous drives. By this time the public at large has become so well informed as to details of Government financing as to reduce materially the amount of labor required to produce the subscriptions. It will be a disappointing surprise if the total rolled up in the four weeks of the campaign does not far surpass the minimum set by the Treasury Department.

The bank statement yesterday showed a decrease of close to $17,000,000 in excess reserve, bringing this item down to the smallest total in five weeks. Loans contracted by almost $14,000,000, while deposits increased more than $12,000,000. The decrease in excess reserve is almost accounted for by a loss of $15,571,000 in the credits of member banks at the Federal Reserve institution, the latter the result of a shrinkage of over $60,000,000 in Government deposits.

COAL PRODUCTION IMPROVES

March Output of Anthracite Greatly Increased—High Wages Paid.

The Miners' Bank of Wilkes-Barre, Penn., notes in its letter for April that the production of anthracite coal has made good progress of late, with correspondingly high returns to the miners.

"Producing companies have made excellent headway," the letter says, "in getting out anthracite coal during the last four weeks of what is usually a period of harsh weather in this valley. With the milder conditions which have prevailed this season, however, it has been possible to push work at various collieries, with the result that the March output in certain quarters has been materially increased.

"The miners for the most part are doing good work and receiving what is probably the highest weekly pay they ever received for such service. The February records show that some of the highest-paid miners earned as much as $350 to $140 for the work they did in that short month."

ANACONDA OUTPUT LARGER.

Mines Produced 28,000,000 Pounds of Copper in March.

The Anaconda Copper Mining Company's production in March amounted to 28,000,000 pounds, indicating the return of operations to a level close to the big months of last year. The output showed an increase of about 4,000,000 pounds over the February total, according to the report issued yesterday, and the largest production for any month since last May.

From June 1 to Oct. 1 the company suffered from labor troubles last year, the outturn in September amounting to no more than 2,800,000 pounds. The August report showed only 11,175,000 pounds, and July only 12,400,000. The record output last year was 31,300,000 pounds in March, and the greatest for 1916 was 33,300,000 pounds. With the labor supply considerably improved over the Winter average, the company expects to show an increased return in the current month, as compared with March.

If you read it in The New York Times you will find the date and a brief synopsis in The New York Times Index, issued quarterly since the first day of 1913. Send for circulation. $2.00 an issue, $8.00 per year. The New York Times Index, Times Square.—Advt.

FISH OFFAL MADE USEFUL.

A By-Product Said to be Better Insulator Than Galalith.

A new process by which certain by-products, valuable for electrical insulation, may be obtained from fish offal, is shortly to be put in operation in Denmark, according to Consul Maurice P. Dunlap in Copenhagen. A factory to make "cornimit," the most important of the new products, is being built in Skagen and is expected to be producing shortly.

"Cornimit" is said to absorb less water and to have larger insulating resistance than galalith. It can also be used for the manufacture of such articles as brushes, combs, telephone apparatus, door or cane handles, furniture ornaments, and for typewriter rollers. It is claimed that it can take the place of galalith, which is made from casein obtained from milk, and of the product known as ayrolith. It may also replace slate boards for insulating mountings. It is said that the price of the finished product will be about 10 cents a pound. A substance termed "fibrin," another of the by-products to be manufactured, is said to be a good substitute for oil and glue in paints.

It is thought that an application of this process might prove profitable along the Eastern coast of the United States, where there is such a large supply of menhaden, the offal of which already has proved valuable as a fertilizer and an oil producer.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Surplus Reserves Decline.

Yesterday's Clearing House statement showed a decrease of $16,751,000 in surplus reserves. The loan account showed a contraction of $43,634,000, while general deposits expanded by nearly $12,500,000, although Government deposits, against which no reserves need be maintained, decreased by $62,512,000. Figures for a year ago show that Saturday's surplus reserves of $44,647,000 compares with $163,578,000 on the corresponding date in 1917, but at that time the reserve requirements were different from what they are today, owing to the changes in the Reserve act made since then. Aggregate loans of the associated banks are about $930,000,000 larger than they were a year ago, while deposits are practically unchanged, the variation amounting to a decrease of only about $3,000,000.

Reserve Bank Gains in Gold Reserves.

The weekly statement of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York shows a further increase of $13,000,000 in gold reserves. Discounts of commercial paper decreased by $13,000,000, and holdings of acceptances were reduced by about $3,000,000. The bank now holds $181,342,000 of Treasury certificates of indebtedness which it purchased from member institutions under an agreement for a resale of the same within fifteen days. The increase of these certificates for the week amounted to $16,000,000. The Reserve Bank statement last week contained a new item under the general head of liabilities, namely, "Foreign accounts, $72,927,772." It was explained at the bank yesterday that this item did not indicate new transactions that the bank had engaged in, but that the officers had merely decided to list the foreign accounts separately, and not under the miscellaneous head of "all other liabilities," where the same has previously been carried. It is understood that these foreign accounts represent funds in hands of the Reserve Bank which stand to the credit of foreign Governments.

Street Car Fares.

There has been an active campaign in this country for some months on the part of the management, stockholders, and bondholders of street railway companies to obtain fare increases to compensate for their soaring operating and maintenance costs. The battle has raged nightly before Public Service Commissions, in the courts, and in the newspapers. Now comes The London Times to report that stockholders of English tramway companies are going into action on the same front. The President of the British Board of Trade, whose post roughly corresponds to that of the Secretary of Commerce, is to receive a deputation of tramway operators and hear their arguments for fare increases all around.

Cotton Chills and Fever.

The week just ended was one of the most interesting, indeed exciting, that the New York cotton market has often, if ever, seen. It clearly demonstrated two things: First, that the dominant factor in the market continues to be an absolutely unprecedented demand for cotton goods, whose effect is directly transmitted to the futures market in raw cotton, and, second, that the only adverse influence to which the market is at all susceptible is talk of Government price-fixing. All other bearish news, bigger crop prospects, bigger into-sight movement, export restriction, and so on, makes no impression in the face of the tremendous demand for cotton from trade sources, but let a mere whisper of price-fixing come along and the market "curls up."

Market Sensitiveness.

This extreme squeamishness regarding possible Government interference looks a little ridiculous to many big cotton men, but it is an undeniable factor in the market, as was shown when it was turned to account in a spectacular market turn on Friday, which also, incidentally, showed that the bear speculators in cotton, despite all the battering they have received, are just as stubbornly determined as ever to sell the market down every chance they get. "A man is born bearish and he usually dies that way," was the comment of one cotton market follower after seeing the eagerness with which various floor traders, late Friday afternoon, seized upon the vague report of a conference with cotton men, to be held by the War Industries Board, to throw cotton on the market in huge blocks. And then, yesterday morning, the market gave its usual return demonstration, which has followed every bear raid this season, and showed its "back-kick" by regaining three-quarters of the decline of Friday, in the short session.

INSPIRATION COPPER PROFIT

Net Income $10,903,588 in 1917, a Loss of $9,725,901.

The Inspiration Consolidated Copper Company earned a net income from mining operations of $10,903,588 in 1917, a decline of $9,725,901 from the total reported for the preceding year. Outside income of $177,144 showed a gain of that amount, as none was reported in 1916. Of the aggregate income of $11,080,732, $9,751,227 was paid out in dividends, leaving a surplus of $1,329,505, compared with $12,081,478.

The sharp falling off in earnings was accounted for in large part by last Summer's strike, from which the company made a slow recovery. The plants are reported to be running full time at present. The income account last year was reduced to the extent of $1,165,240 by reservations for Federal war taxes.

Help Smash Kaiserism

To smash Kaiserism, it is imperative for each of us to lend our dollars to the Government, through the purchase of Liberty Bonds.

And, in purchasing these bonds you not only have the satisfaction of knowing that you are doing your "bit," but absolutely safeguarding your money in the world's soundest investment, while receiving a good financial return thereon.

If you have only $5, and can save $2½ a month, you can buy a $50 Liberty Bond on The Part Payment Plan. And it is the duty of everybody, as a citizen of the United States, to buy at least one $50 bond.

In connection with the Third Liberty Loan, among other subjects contained in the current issue of our fortnightly publication, "Securities Suggestions," are articles entitled:

The World's Safest Investment
Ambassador Gerard's Talk With Kaiser
How Kaiser Celebrates Good Friday
The Investment Worth of Liberty Bonds

Securities Suggestions also outlines what Liberty Bonds are, their market possibilities, their cash value, and their collateral value. It will be mailed to investors FREE upon request for 12-Q.

We charge no commission on purchases of Liberty Bonds.

GERMAN COAL CRISIS LAID TO MINE UNIONS

Militarists Accused Workmen of Being in League with British Labor Element.

CHARGE HOTLY RESENTED

Socialist Deputy Declares Fuel Monopolists Merely Tried to Shift the Blame.

That some of the Pan German newspapers, in their bitter attacks upon the German workers who dared to strike as a protest against the food shortage and the continuance of the war, accused the German miners of having had an agreement with the British mine workers to hinder both the German and British Governments in their conduct of the war, is indicated by accounts of a speech delivered in the Prussian Landtag by Deputy Otto Hué, found in German newspapers recently received here.

In the course of a sharp criticism of Government inefficiency in the face of the fuel crisis that gripped Germany so hard a few weeks ago, Deputy Hué, who is a majority, or pro-Government, Socialist, and Secretary of the German Miners' Union, said:

"Of all the belligerent States we are the best situated regarding the matter of getting a supply of coal. In spite of this we are facing not merely a coal scarcity but a coal famine. The individual householder is getting, not 60 or 70 per cent. of what he consumed last year, but not even 20 per cent.

"The supply of the gas plants of Greater Berlin is always only enough for a few days, and the same condition obtains at the gas and electric plants of all the other cities. We told you in plenty of time that things would get into just such shape as they are today. But nothing was done. This must be particularly laid against those who fear that democracy will ruin Prussia.

Coal Control Delayed.

"When the Imperial Commissioner was called in, of course much too late, he did not prohibit the trade in coal. In the shape of the coal adjustment bureau an institution was created that materially strengthened the coal trusts in their monopolistic position. The whole arrangement was created by those interested and the competent Government bureaus, without any consultation with the consumers or the workers. In doing this there was no talk of war socialism, not to speak of real socialism. The power is possessed by the body having the goods, and that body is the trust. We do not oppose the trusts, but we demand that they be controlled by the State, so that they function for the common good. The Imperial Commissioner knows of only a few cases of violations of the regulations. Well, the Mansfeld Mining Company furnished coal to the couple of thousand 'yellow' workmen that it employs, but nothing to the 10,000 other workers. How did it get this coal that is surely under the control of the Commissioner?

"Today every one naturally tries to get along the best way he can. No member of this House will say that he obeys all the food regulations. No person can do that, because the rations are much too small. A big part of the blame for the critical condition obtaining belongs to the Landtag itself for having refused to incur the expense of the midland canal. This price extortion must finally be put an end to. In England there has been a maximum price for coal since July, 1916.

Defends the Miners.

"Now it has been asserted that the mine workers were responsible for the scarcity of coal, partly because they were lazy and partly because they were said to have refused to work. Why, persons have even talked about 'unjustified cessations of work' and about a 'general strike of the miners' in a treasonable sense. This, above all else, must be spoken of in public, because the poison of slander is permeating the country. Newspapers, whose financial dependency was sketched so well yesterday by Deputy Kanzow, have even spoken of common action by the German and English mine workers. This slandering of the workers is being used for reactionary domestic politics.

"The wages of the hard-coal miners have risen 33 per cent. since 1916, those of the soft-coal miners 31 per cent.; the prices of foodstuffs, however, have doubled and trebled. Even in the soft-coal district around Berlin average wages of only 10 to 15 cents an hour are being paid. Although for political reasons the mine workers are represented as being insatiable, there has not been a single conflict there. We protest against these repeated assertions. To be sure, there are persons traveling around the country lamenting that a military dictatorship had not been declared long ago. They want to drive the social democracy into the sharpest kind of opposition. If an explosion comes, we have warned you in time.

"Already in the Fall of 1914 the workers' organizations asked for adjustment bureaus to avoid strikes. But the employers decline. 'Undesirable' workers are locked out and recommended to the military authorities for service in the army and in their places unskilled workers are advertised for and put to work. The Minister says that no man shall be forced to work overtime. But he who refuses to work overtime is discharged. In Upper Silesia strikes could not be brought to an end because the employers refused to negotiate with the representatives of the organizations.

"The organizations are supporting the defense of the country to the best of their ability, and even the independent Socialists in our union have loyally done their duty throughout the war. It is a direct insult to charge them with aiming at handicapping the national defense through their efforts."

PIANOS IN AUSTRALIA.

The American-Made Instrument Is Much Preferred There.

Though the manufacture of Australian pianos has been steadily progressing since the war interrupted the large German-Australian piano trade, American pianos, according to Consul William C. Magelssen of Melbourne, are still preferred in that market to the domestic product. The one objection to the American instruments is that the styles of cases used by manufacturers in the United States are not along the lines to which Australians are accustomed. Thus it is thought that, if American manufacturers would make a careful study of the designs favored in Australia, they would greatly increase their sales in that market.

There are still some stocks of German pianos on hand in Australia, but their sale is strictly under Government supervision. From time to time dates have been set at which sales of German goods, including pianos, must cease, but merchants have always found it impossible to clear their stocks in the time allotted to them, and several extensions of time have been granted. Domestic-made and American instruments sell best, but because of their superior tone and quality the pianos from the United States command much higher prices.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Stocks were very strong and trading active yesterday at the close of the Consolidated Stock Exchange. The entire list, in a market unusually broad, made exceptional advances, the leading issues showing net gains of a point and more, with many of them closing at the high for the session. Where there were slight recessions at the close the net improvement was still of a substantial character. With the rise in prices business increased; the only period of hesitation was shortly after the opening, when profit-taking appeared in some volume, but was readily absorbed.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

The Merchant's Point of View

Retail business, which was materially helped by an Autumn in accordance with the calendar and a Winter that came in early, has again been aided by a forward Spring. The recent pleasant weather had its effect on shoppers, who found it advisable to replenish wardrobes for the transition period between the extremes of cold and heat. So there was a stimulation of buying of seasonable garments, with the promise of further purchases when increase of temperature will make such needed. This has had its effect on the primary markets for textiles as well as on the trade of the garment manufacturers. Buyers have been coming to town imbued with more confidence as a result of the pre-Easter sales in the stores, and are purchasing somewhat freely with due regard for the higher prices prevalent. No very marked change in buying disposition by customers for the time being is indicated, although a little more care and discrimination in purchases is noted. A hopeful sign is the prompt payment of bills all along the line, which is especially needed now, when the disposition is not to extend credits in view of the enhanced prices of commodities. This lessens the pressure on the banks for capital at a time when the Government is after needful funds for its purposes.

Tariff Advantage for Aliens.

Food for thought is given in the revelations attending the seizure by the Alien Property Custodian of the half dozen woolen mills, situated in New Jersey, but virtually owned in Germany. Their establishment in this country seems to have been due to the desire of the Woolens' Cartel, or trust, in Germany to use the American high tariff for its own purposes. German machinery was brought over here for operation on the goods, and German workmen were imported to work the machines. The profits, of course, went mainly to Germany. The controllers of the mills acted jointly for the protection of their common interests, and usually against those of American-owned mills. They were among the blatant advocates of higher duties to enable them better to exploit the people of this country under the specious guise of protection to American labor. All the while they were centres of German thought and propaganda cultivating an alien spirit. The revelations concerning the purchases of wool for German Army use by one of the concerns made a decidedly unpleasant impression. Further investigation will doubtless disclose other cases in which the German business interests have made use of the high tariffs here to promote their own ends and to add to the huge sums which went yearly as profits from this country to Germany. It will be well if politicians and legislators will take heed of what has been brought out, if only to guard against legislation in the future which shall enable foreign interests to profit as they have. There have not been wanting indications that the great German dye and chemical industries are preparing after the war to get in their hooks here. This determination was, in fact, avowed at the time the merger of such interests was announced. Forewarned is forearmed.

Germany's Economic Straits.

Evidences multiply of the perplexities which beset the German mind in figuring out how post-war conditions are to be met. Two subjects are receiving a great deal of attention. One relates to the manner in which expenses, including interest on the war debt and pensions, shall be met. The other is the question of recovering the foreign trade on which the prosperity of the industries of Germany must depend. One scheme discussed involves the governmental purchase and control of raw materials and the sale of the same at a profit for the purpose of raising needed revenue. It has been estimated that between $1,250,000,000 and $1,500,000,000 worth of raw materials is used in the various industries, and that a one-third tax would yield between $375,000,000 and $500,000,000. The materials would include, among others, iron, copper, tin, aluminium, textiles, and petroleum. That such a scheme should be in contemplation indicates the financial straits of the country. The only hope the Germans have in recovering the whole or part of their foreign trade depends on their ability to undersell competitors. Cheapness was what commended German wares, and this could only be achieved by a combination of the low cost of raw materials, cheap labor, and direct and indirect subsidies. Taxing raw materials would make them cost more, wages are bound to be higher after the war, and subsidies would have to show up in some form of taxation which would be a burden to industries. A scheme, therefore, such as is proposed would render Germany powerless to compete in foreign markets, and the mere suggestion of it betokens the desperate economic condition of the country.

To Combine for Export Trade.

After deliberations extending for a couple of years or more and conferences that promised to be endless, an agreement was finally reached during the last week on the form of the Webb bill to permit combinations in aid of export trade. The general purpose of the measure received assent from all quarters when it was first proposed. But the idea grew that possibly export trade combinations might prove to be only a step toward combinations in the domestic field, thus negativing the effects of the anti-trust and unfair competition laws. So, in the reworking of the bill, care has been taken to make clear the distinction between the two kinds of trade. As finally agreed to, the bill simply states the kinds of associations for export trade which are declared not to be affected by the anti-trust laws and the one creating the Federal Trade Commission. These associations are not to enter into any agreements which may enhance or depress prices, lessen competition, or restrain trade in this country or of domestic competitors in foreign trade. Nor are they permitted to use unfair methods of competition against others in this country who are exporters. The Federal Trade Commission is empowered to see that violations of these requirements are not permitted. The need for the enactment of the bill is more evident now even than it was when the matter was first broached, because of the collective system of purchasing determined on by foreign Governments and associations of manufacturers. Without it, the latter would be enabled to do what the German cartels did before the war—play off one producer or manufacturer against another in this country and so often obtain articles at less than the cost of production. In foreign markets, also, producers in Germany and elsewhere were able, through their combinations, to act as a unit to the disadvantage of American competitors. These evils the Webb bill will remedy.

Trade with Other Countries.

Figures were made public during the last week showing the course of the country's foreign trade for the eight months ended with February. The imports totaled $1,841,316,090, an increase of about $300,000,000 over the corresponding period last year, while the exports were $3,843,348,227, or about $200,000,000 less than in 1917. Grouped according to grand divisions, the imports from North America led, followed by those from Asia, South America, Europe, Oceania, and Africa in the order named. A gain was shown in the imports from each grand division except Europe, where there was a loss of about $50,000,000. The country standing first on the imports list was Canada, with $293,670,545, or about one-sixth of the total. Following it came Japan with $181,410,490, British East Indies with $173,550,914, United Kingdom with $129,253,639, Cuba with $128,811,325, and Argentina with $120,247,565. Chile, Brazil, Mexico, France, and the Philippines followed in succession. In the exports list Europe led among the grand divisions, although the amount sent there was over $440,000,000 less than in the corresponding eight months of the year before. The exports to Europe constituted nearly 63 per cent. of the total. Next to Europe came North America, then Asia, then South America, then Oceania, and finally Africa. Among the countries taking American products, the United Kingdom led with $1,201,761,932, or about one-third the total of exports. Following came France with $561,149,821, and then these: Italy, $321,895,704; Japan, $181,217,274; Cuba, $145,681,920; European Russia, $115,926,120; Argentina, $80,717,932; Mexico, $76,041,855; Chile, $45,815,907, and Brazil, $44,545,180. The greatest expansion was shown in the case of Japan, which took nearly $100,000,000 more of American products than in the corresponding eight months of 1917. The greatest drop was in the exports to European Russia, which were about $200,000,000 less.

Cotton in Strong Position.

Exports of cotton have dropped to a point where they are almost negligible, and the indications are not favorable for much of an increase in the near future. Neither do the inkings by domestic mills show an expansion. Still, the quotations in the markets keep climbing up, and the past week showed some new high records. Even the figures for the crop that has not yet been planted have been remarkably high. It is a sellers' market in this commodity, as in practically all other products, and holders are in a position to hang on until they get their price. Supplies, therefore, come out only gradually, and then only in obedience to an insistent demand in which price cuts a small figure. Conditions in the growing districts, so far as the new crop is concerned, are quite favorable. It begins to look as though the acreage will be larger than last year and that more fertilizer will be used. No one down South fears the effect of a large crop in reducing the prices of cotton or its by-products. Even if the war is not ended before it is all marketed, the demand will be large enough to make the raising of the crop extremely profitable. And, should the war end before Autumn of next year, the gain will be ever so much larger. In the goods' market, the last week has shown some price advances, though the trading has not been large, and there have been evidences of profitable sales by second hands.

Government Order on Woolens.

Wool markets have been perturbed by the recent order of General Goethals to the mills directing them to use every loom available for fabrics needed by the Government, so as to expedite deliveries. They were also notified to reserve all raw stock which they own in excess of Government requirements. The Government will exercise its option on what wool it needs and will apportion it to such mills doing army work which happen to lack the raw material. This has been regarded as a form of commandeering, but in the end it may not prove quite as drastic a measure as it first seemed. There are some mills, like the German-owned ones recently taken over by the Alien Property Custodian, which have done only a small share of Government work and which can easily be made to do more. Then, too, as the mills working on certain orders will soon be making deliveries for the next heavyweight season, it is not believed that they will be peremptorily stopped in such work unless real necessity compels it. Then, too, it must be borne in mind that the normal capacity of the woolen mills of the country is many times the output of what even a military force of several million men can use. But the effect of the increased military preparations and the need of haste in getting out supplies will tend to curtail production for civilian purposes for a while and introduce the element of uncertainty as to deliveries. This will have to be taken into account by garment manufacturers.

UNDESERVED CREDIT NOW HARDER TO GET

Slow-Pay Customers Are Finding This Out, and So Are Dishonest Persons.

In the category of that well-known but unfortunate person who was all dressed up and had no place to go, will soon be placed a number of wealthy persons living in the metropolitan district who want to obtain merchandise on credit and can find no shop or store that will give it to them. Already more than one person of this type has found his or her credit limited, if the privilege of buying on a charge account has not already been taken away, and as time goes on this number will be materially increased unless there is a "right-about-face" movement in regard to the prompt payment of obligations previously incurred.

While, according to executives of the Associated Retail Credit Men of New York, an organization whose membership embraces the credit men and assistants of practically every important dry goods store and specialty shop in the city, the number of "slow-pay" accounts on the books of these establishments is lower now than for many years, there are still many persons who regard the shops and stores as places to buy on credit and to pay when the spirit moves them. It is customers of this type for which the associa on is going gunning. The ground taken is that an obligation is an obligation at all times, that a charge account is an accommodation, not a right, and that, with the added burden of expense in doing business that has been put on the stores by the war, it is more than ever incumbent on charge customers to meet their bills promptly according to the terms on which the accounts are opened.

Other types of shoppers whose activities are going to be seriously curbed by the association through its clearing house of credit information are those commonly known as "dead beats," bad check passers, and persons who endeavor to open accounts by giving false or inadequate references. Much has already been done along this line, with the result that the shops and stores have been saved thousands of dollars in the aggregate. Typical instances of how some of the individuals classed above try to "put something over" on the credit men was told by a TIMES reporter yesterday by several of the latter.

There was the case of one man, for instance, who came from an up-State city armed with a number of references of a character that would be acceptable to practically any credit man. One of them was from an ex-Governor of a State. To make a long story short, this man went to one of the local stores and asked to open an account. After examining his references the account was opened, and the man bought about $100 worth of merchandise. The account dragged along without payment until, finally, the credit man suggested that it was time to settle. The man agreed, and tendered in payment a check for an amount larger than the total of the account, requesting the difference in cash. It ultimately developed that, against an actual bank account totaling 68 cents, he had drawn checks to the extent of $4,000.

In another case, a professional-looking man came to a certain store to purchase a coat. He offered a check in payment and when asked for reference he produced a physician's license and also showed a document purporting to appoint him to a position as Government inspector of certain medical supplies. The check in question was drawn by a medical institute in a nearby State, and, though it appeared to be all right, the credit man was wary and refused to accept it. Later the same man tried his game on another store here, the check being drawn this time on a Western bank. In both cases he tried his scheme late in the afternoon, after the banks were closed, hoping that thus to forestall inquiries.

Late one afternoon a well-dressed, prosperous-looking man approached the credit manager of a well-known shop and told him that, though he was very anxious to purchase some things for himself and wife, he had come away from home short of ready money and would have to pay for the merchandise with a check drawn on a local bank. As a reference he very glibly gave the name of a wealthy New Yorker, who he claimed was his brother. This was not enough to satisfy the credit man, however, and he suggested that the prospective customer complete the transaction on the following day. In the meantime the former got in touch with the bank on which the check had been drawn and found that no account was carried there in the name given. Willing to give the "customer" the benefit of any doubt there might be, the credit manager then got in touch with the man whose name had been given as the brother, thinking possibly that the check had been drawn against the latter's account with his permission. To his surprise, the credit man learned that the wealthy man in question had no brother. The "customer" did not come back.

Not all of the "con" games tried on the stores are worked by men. Some of them—and some of the cleverest of all—are the tricks of women. Witness the incident of a woman who came into a certain Fifth Avenue establishment, went to the office of the proprietor and, having got in touch with him, proceeded to tell him how she had once met him at a social affair. Though by no means as certain of the meeting as the woman appeared to be, the proprietor chatted with her politely for a few minutes, when she made known the purpose of her call.

She had not the honor of an account in that store, she gushed, but having seen something there that she just had to have, she thought it would be very nice of Mr. — if he would take her to the credit office and say a good word for her. This was done, though the proprietor obviously was "up in the air." The usual formalities were gone through, and the woman was permitted to order the merchandise. The size of the order was such as to attract attention at once, and it was decided to make a prompt and very thorough investigation of the customer's references. This brought out the fact that, while her husband had been in the business she gave, his firm had been turned out of its quarters for nonpayment of rent and the husband himself had disappeared. One of the first inquiries the investigator got when he began asking questions of the Superintendent of the building in which the husband had been located was this: "Did your people get a bad check, too?"

From all this it will be seen that the transgressor, knowing his own way to be hard, is not making the business life of the retail credit man any path of roses. Yet, with the gradual expansion of the facilities of the association for detecting and reporting cases like those set down above, things promise steadily to get easier and safer for all concerned but the transgressor.

BIG TEXTILE SHOW COMING.

To be Held Here This Month with Attendant Conventions.

What is said to be the largest exhibition of textile machinery and finished merchandise ever held, and the first to be held in this city, will occupy four floors of the Grand Central Palace from April 29 to May 11, inclusive. Among the features of the exhibition will be a fashion playlet, with living models, and the showing of a considerable number of advance patterns of silk, cotton, and woolen fabrics, as well as knit goods, from the leading American mills. It is expected to bring to this city the largest number of textile men assembled here in the history of the American fabric-making industries.

This will be the sixth exhibition held by the National Textile Exhibitors' Association, and among the attendance, it is anticipated, will be many export buyers. For their benefit a suite has been reserved at the Hotel Biltmore, where there will be a corps of expert polyglingual stenographers.

The National Association of Cotton Manufacturers and the members of the American Cotton Manufacturers' Association will meet here in joint session on May 1, 2, and 3. The National Woolen and Worsted Association, the National Reworked Wool Association, and the National Conditioning Association and other organizations connected with the textile and allied trades will also hold conventions here while the exhibition is on. It is estimated that 10,000 American textile manufacturers, agents, superintendents, and overseers will make a close inspection of the machinery exhibits and get a first-hand story of the American dye situation.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

More Disposition to Sell Appears at Yokohama and Canton.

The demand for Japanese raw silks at Yokohama quieted down somewhat in the early part of last week and reelers showed more desire to sell. They reduced prices about 10 cents a pound, and this had the effect of greatly stimulating the demand. This, in turn, had the effect of advancing prices back to the old level of 1,400 yen for Sinshiu No. 1. The latest cables stated that the market is active, with an upward tendency. Reports received by A. P. Vilin & Brothers, Inc., place the estimated visible stock at 9,500 bales. Cable service is still very poor, there being usually a delay of seven to eight days.

Canton has quieted down and reelers are somewhat more anxious to close out old silks, as new silks will appear in that market in about three or four weeks. There is quite some buying, though, on new crop silks, both coarse and fine, and considerable business has been transacted for May, June, and July shipments. The Shanghai market is unchanged as to prices on tealees and steam filatures. There is a good demand for tussahs, which are getting rather scarce and which cannot be bought for shipments other than May and June. Spots in this grade are entirely out of the market.

The Italian market continues very firm, with all of the production still being consumed by the European mills. In this city the high prices asked by the Japanese reelers have restricted business to a considerable extent, and almost all manufacturers have withdrawn from the market as buyers. However, this inactivity is not expected to last long, as the outlook for business in manufactured silks and ribbons is very good and raw silk stocks of the mills are none too large at the present time.

NEW HATS IN THE SHOPS.

Attractive Millinery Models Are Now Displayed.

Hats in white Valenciennes lace and white organdie, which can suitably be worn with soft, summery dresses, are making their appearance in some of the leading Fifth Avenue shops, according to the latest bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. Large, drooping leghorns, some in mushroom shapes, have the entire top made of shirred lace of this kind, and the white organdie hats have soft edges and crowns of the same material. Trimmings of black velvet ribbons, velvet and appliqued flowers and fruits complete these simple but effective hats.

At one well-known shop, the bulletin says, many models of Georgette are being sold, with crowns of silk straw and edgings of milk or bugle beads and trimmed with beaded ornaments. In white or orchid, these hats will be the most effective for afternoon and evening wear. Another attractive model shown by this shop is a turban of large white flat crushed roses with white "feelers" set in between the flowers.

"Very chic," the bulletin goes on, "are the navy blue Georgette and white straw models now being worn by fashionably dressed New York women, in small sailors with high crowns made of navy blue Georgette and white hemp facing. A sash of Georgette draped around the crown and finished off with a fringed edge hanging over the side or back, forms the only trimming of these hats.

COTTON FABRICS SELLING.

Especially Active Trading Here in Printcloths Yesterday.

Buying recommenced with a rush in the local gray goods market yesterday, with 38½-inch 64-60s holding the centre of attention. Not only did these goods sell for April delivery at 18 cents, but 1919 contracts, calling for shipments in January, February, and March, were sold at 17¼ cents. April-June lots of 38½-inch 64-56s were sold at 17¼ cents also. Sales of 39-inch 80 squares, for deliveries running through August, September, and October, were made at 23 cents. Bids of 19½ cents for spot 39-inch 68-72s failed to bring the goods out. That popular bandage construction, 38½-inch 44-40s, sold in a large way at 12 cents for shipment in April, May, and June.

While the coarse goods end of the market was not so attractive as the printcloth yarn constructions, July-January deliveries of four-yard, 56-60 sheetings were sold at 23 cents. This construction is also much used for war purposes. While not a great deal is heard of drills these days, they are said to be very firm on the basis of 23½ cents for spot and nearby 30-inch, 3.25-yard goods.

WHAT IS SHOWN BY THE EASTER TRADE

Storekeepers Say the Tendency Is to Buy Medium-Priced and Staple Goods.

The Easter buying in the local department stores this year, which was very closely watched by all merchants for any evidences of a shift in the current of trade, is said to have been particularly gratifying in many respects. Aside from the fact that the volume of this business was considerably greater than many in the trade had expected, and, in fact, makes a favorable comparison with last year's figures, it was found that the quality or value of the merchandise offered was of greater importance in closing a sale than practically any other factor. Particularly in women's garments was this tendency said to have manifested itself. Though style and appearance, of course, still are demanded, these seem no longer to be as all-important factors as they have been in the past.

The fact that most of the department stores in this city ran ahead of last year in their volume of sales is taken as a good omen of what may be expected to follow for the rest of the Spring season and during the coming Summer months. That staple merchandise of real value will sell, and sell as rapidly as it can be obtained under present conditions, is the lesson which the Easter season is supposed to have indicated.

It was found that by far the greatest gain was made in that class of merchandise which is medium priced, and which is still good in workmanship and substantial in materials. Very fancy merchandise, luxuries, and goods which are exorbitantly high in price did not sell, it is reported, in anything like the quantities sold in former years. And very cheap goods, which had nothing much to recommend themselves to the purchaser other than low prices, seem also to have been very much neglected, even more so than the extremely high-priced merchandise. Thus the trade at both ends of the scale of prices was found to be converging toward the middle or medium priced goods, and it is to these substantial lines that merchants now are looking to maintain their volume and to increase it if possible.

"I have noticed," said the general manager of one of the largest stores in this city, "that women are buying more carefully than ever before. They are not spending less. In a good many cases, due to higher prices, they are spending considerably more. But they are showing a very strong disposition to make sure of the quality and of the money value of what they are getting before they will buy. The class of customers who used to come in and order one dress in preference to another simply because it cost more than the other has almost totally disappeared. And very few women are indulging these days in those snap purchases made on the impulse of the moment for no other particular reason than that the article in question catches their eye. There used to be a great many women of both of the kinds I have described, and the last mentioned was the bane of the shopkeeper's existence. Most of the purchases of this latter sort were returned, the purchaser having had time before the article was delivered for more mature thought, which usually demonstrated to her that she really had no particular need for it.

"Nowadays, however, and it was particularly well demonstrated in the Easter business, women are showing the greatest amount of plain, practical common sense on their shopping tours. And it is in a good many ways a great relief to the stores. For one thing, our percentage of returns has been lower this season than it has been after any past Easter season that I can remember."

According to the head of another large department store in the city, trade has been unusually good this year, and there is no reason why it should not continue so. "Everybody is working, everybody must wear clothes and eat food, and there has never been so much money floating around in the country as there is today. Our only trouble so far this Spring has been to supply the wants of our customers. The demand for staple merchandise of all sorts is bigger than the supply.

"There has been some slight falling off in the volume of the very high priced trade, but even here the curtailed business is due rather to a smaller amount of imported goods available, such as dresses and suits, than to any real falling off in demand. Women who have been accustomed in the past to buying the best are still buying the best, though perhaps a little more carefully, and probably will continue to do so. The only class of merchandise which seems to be almost entirely out of the running is the very cheap stuff. There are no more poor people around. War wages have put those who formerly could afford only the cheapest in a position where they can, and do, buy good, substantial clothes, furniture, and food. Thus, the normal sales of medium-priced merchandise are being reinforced by the trade of both those who formerly bought only the most expensive, and by those who, until now, could afford only the cheapest.

"The Easter season has plainly shown us that the dry goods trade in this city, and, for that matter, throughout the country, must depend for the great bulk of its trade on that class of merchandise which is good without being extravagant, and which is of practical use and value. The developments here are, in fact, simply a repetition of the experiences of the English and Canadian merchants since the war started."

DEALINGS IN BROAD SILKS.

Buyers Find Rather a Limited Assortment to Choose From.

The resumption of buying in the market for broad silks in this city, after the temporary lull just before Easter, is said to have been prompt and fairly active. Though there are many buyers yet to come to town for the late Spring and the Summer buying, those already here are making selections from the somewhat limited assortments of merchandise which sellers have on hand, and business during the last week has been in fairly large volume.

In some quarters, however, it is said that there is more interest being displayed in Fall supplies than in goods for immediate delivery. But, inasmuch as there are as yet practically no mills which are in a position either to show their Fall lines or to quote prices for Fall delivery, business of this sort is still confined mostly to such staple all-year-round weaves as are available, of which the buyers are willing to accept comparatively nearby deliveries.

With the strike ended in Paterson, there is an easier feeling among sellers whose factors are in that district, not only as to future supplies, but also as to deliveries on orders already placed. But the question of prices is still a troublesome factor in the trade. It was pointed to as reassuring, however, that recent advances of from 10 to 20 per cent. on some of the most popular weaves did not have the effect of materially curtailing business. Where the goods that were wanted were found, it is said that the advance was paid with very little haggling.

STATUS OF WOOLEN MILLS.

Recent Order Does Not Mean Commandeering All of Them.

The woolen and worsted mills of the country have not been commandeered, according to a statement issued yesterday from the office of the American Association of Woolen and Worsted Manufacturers, 45 East Seventeenths Street, nor does it appear at the present time that they will be. The statement continues:

"The Government wants very heavy yardage between now and Aug. 1, and it expects, and the association urges in the strongest possible terms, that every mill capable of making O. D. shirting, suiting, overcoating, or blanket will adjust itself at once to giving the Government the maximum yardage it is capable of between the present time and Aug. 1.

"All contracts will be placed on the newly-adopted specifications for the heaviest fabrics. These specifications are available at the Quartermaster's Department, Woolen Section, Washington, D. C., and at the rooms of the association.

"Each mill should develop a sample of the fabric it is best equipped to make and submit its offer to Washington at once. Contracts are now being placed.

"At present it may be stated that this emergency does not mean the cancellation of civilian business, but it does mean that civilian deliveries will have to be deferred. The extent to which mills will be disturbed will depend entirely upon the spontaneity with which they meet the present emergency. If it is met, there will be no necessity for commandeering. If it is not, mills will be commandeered."

Credit Men's Spring Dinner.

The annual Spring meeting and dinner of the New York Credit Men's Association is to be held in the Hotel Astor on the evening of April 25. It is to be known, according to the announcement, as the Liberty Bond Dinner. The speakers so far announced are J. H. Covington, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and G. M. Dahl, Vice President of the Chase National Bank. Arrangements for the dinner are being made by the Public Meetings Committee, of which U. S. Kolby is Chairman. There will be a reception at 6 o'clock, which will be followed by the dinner an hour later.

MANY PELTS TO BE SOLD.

Details of Fur Auction to Begin in This City Tomorrow.

The largest, and in very many respects the best, collection of furs ever offered at a public auction in this city, will be placed on sale in the Masonic Temple, Twenty-third Street and Sixth Avenue, tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Active selling will follow solicitation of subscriptions to the Third Liberty Loan, which in turn will follow an address by Charles E. Mitchell, President of the National City Company. The soliciting will be in charge of the Liberty Loan Committee of the fur trade, headed by Chairman Samuel Ullmann.

A large part of the first day's selling will be given to the various kinds of foxes, including blue, gray, cross, Australian, kitt, Japanese, red, white, and sundry. Other offerings for the day will consist of fisher, wolverine, otter, and white fox paws. Only three things—mole, leopard, and silver fox—will be sold on Tuesday. This is due principally to the large quantities of mole and silver fox that are scheduled, the assortment of the latter totaling 708, being the biggest and best ever offered, and the unavoidable slowness with which silver fox are auctioned. A pair of silver foxes will be auctioned for the benefit of the Oshkosh (Wis.) chapter of the Red Cross, they having been donated by a shipper in that place. The donor's bid on them is $500.

Wednesday's selling also will be confined to three kinds of furs, because of the large quantities offered. These will be about 66,000 mink, about 11,000 badger, and approximately 83,000 ermine. On Thursday will be sold, more than 16,000 house cats and large quantities of kolinsky, marmot, American, Australian, and ringtail opossum, squirrel, flying squirrel, and beaver. A fairly large assortment of Tasmanian opossum also will be put up. Much of the day's interest, however, will centre on the selling of 3,157 marten pelts, which are sometimes called Hudson Bay sable, and 432 fine Russian sable skins.

On Friday the "star" offerings of Auctioneer J. Gordon Noakes of the New York Fur Auction Sales Corporation will be more than 405,000 muskrats and 25,122 black "rats." This is a large collection, the present shortage considered, and an active demand is anticipated. Black muskrats especially will be wanted, as they are very popular for use in coats in the natural state. More than 125,000 nutria will also be sold on Friday, and other offerings for that day will consist of about 65,000 skunk, sundries, Japanese, stone and baum marten, Japanese mink, lynx, hair seal, and Chinese weasel. Raccoon and wolf, respectively totaling 76,836 and 24,858, will feature the last day of the sale, other items to be auctioned then including wildcat, civet cat, ringtail cat, bear, and polar bear.

In all, well over 1,500,000 skins will be disposed of, including more than fifty distinct varieties, exclusive of the sundries. The value of the entire collection is conservatively placed at over $3,000,000.

Condensed Milk Commandeered.

The British Government has issued an order prohibiting the importation of condensed milk, effective since April 1, except by the British Government, according to an announcement of the War Trade Board. It is also provided that any milk now on its way to Great Britain shall be requisitioned by the Government on its arrival there. The War Trade Board therefore will henceforth refuse export licenses to shipments of condensed milk to Great Britain unless consigned to the Government, or unless bearing the approval of the Allied Provisions Export Commission.

Expect Early Buying for Fall.

Cloak and suit manufacturers in this city are preparing for an early buying of Fall merchandise this year, which, it is believed, will materialize because of the rather general scarcity of merchandise. It is thought that many retailers, realizing this condition, will feel that they had better come to market early if they would have any kind of an assortment to choose from. Consequently work on Fall creations is being rushed, and it is said that very soon there will be quite a few manufacturers with Fall lines ready for display in spite of the fact that it is still several months before the normal opening time.

Women's Overalls Selling.

There is a continued strong demand from many parts of the country for overalls for women, according to reports from several manufacturers of these garments in this city. It is said that they are becoming no less popular with women in private life, who are undertaking gardening and other outdoor activities, than they are with those who are engaged in manufacturing. Several types are well taken, including those made with a detachable skirt and those with split skirts which may be unbuttoned and drawn around the ankles, forming bloomers.

Punta Arenas Wool Clip.

The wool clip in Punta Arenas, Chile this year is estimated to be 5 per cent less than the quantity clipped a year ago. It is said, however, according to Consul John R. Bradley, who is stationed there, that the fleece is of a better quality than that of last season. The larger amount clipped in 1917 is thought to be due to the fact that strikes postponed the shearing last year for one month.

HOW WICHITA AND EMPORIA VIEW THE WAR

A Unique Chronicle of Travel and Romance by William Allen White—Latest Fiction by John Galsworthy, George W. Cable, Edward Lucas White, and Others

THE MARTIAL ADVENTURES OF HENRY AND ME. By William Allen White. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

HENRY is the editor and owner of The Wichita Beacon. His friend is the editor of The Emporia Gazette. But you wouldn't know them by either of these characterizations. You might be led to suspect from them that they were both detachedly critical, serious, that worse bugbear still, "literary." That would show that you don't know either Wichita or Emporia. You remember that H. G. Wells, when he came here, started to criticise us before he sailed from England, his criticism being based on the way the questions were put on his passport blank. And don't editors and writers belong to the same breed generally? Well, Henry and his friend do not. They represent Wichita and Emporia. Their trip to the war is begun in somewhat the spirit of any American business man, "fat, bald, and middle-aged," about to start on a Cook's tour in the ancient times when the earth was at peace. That is what gives this book its validity.

Henry and his friend might be any two middle-aged bald men from the "thousand replicas of Wichita and Emporia spattered like guinea freckles all over the American map for 3,000 miles." Henry and his friend are provincial. They admit it and are proud of it. They judge things by the standards of Wichita and Emporia. Henry stands on the deck of the Espagne, bearing Red Cross nurses and doctors to France, and looks at the ocean with the critical eye of the Wichita real estate speculator. He decides that it needs considerable draining! Bordeaux, they think, would make a good film if it had Mary Pickford. It is Mark Twain all over again, making jokes before a masterpiece. Frankly, the jokes are a trifle old-fashioned. But after all jokes have little or nothing to do with the real purpose of the book. Here are two plain, middle-aged Americans, who have devoted their lives to the local history of Wichita and Emporia, going to war with commissions in their pockets as Colonels to investigate the Red Cross. They are as nonmilitary as missionaries. How is the war going to strike them?

The essence of provincialism on its worst side is narrowness, inflexibility of mind. It is really a colossal provincialism which lies at the back of Germany's imperialism. And you very soon realize, even before they have left the boat, that of this gigantically vicious provincialism Henry and his friend, that is to say Wichita and Emporia, which means America, have not a whiff. There are strange people on the boat. There is a lady, for example, who does not resemble any ladies Henry and his friend have ever met. Her millinery was strange and wonderful, and her eyes, unlike those of Emporia ladies, were "full of sex instead of vision." And to the grotesque and incongruous motley of standards they meet on the boat here is the Emporia editor's reaction:

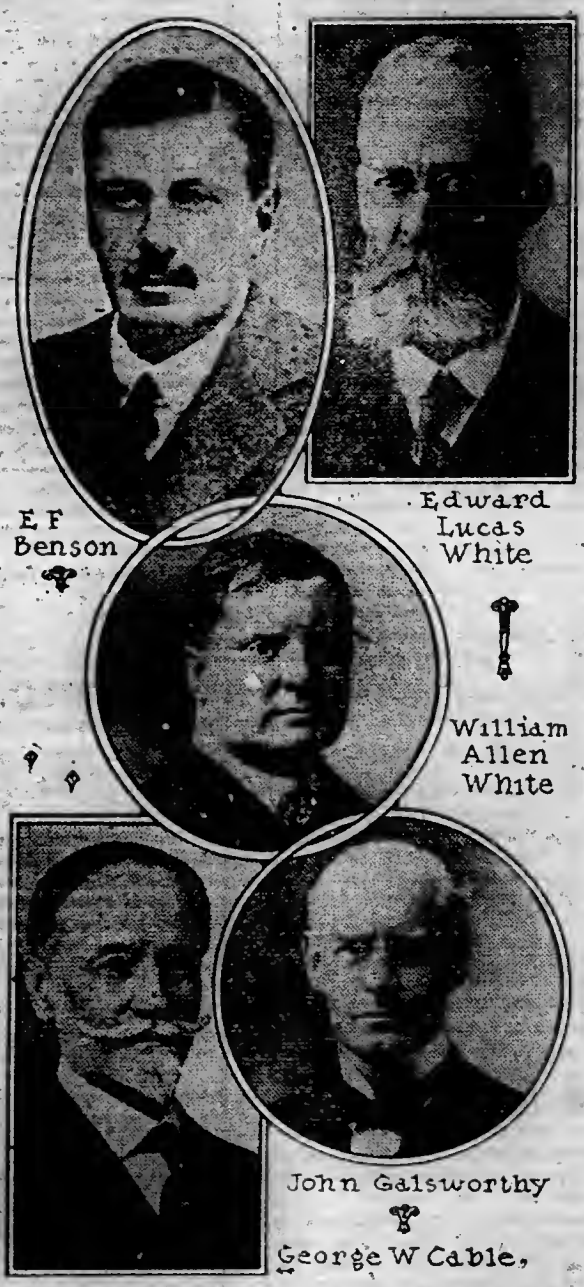
> So there we were. The Col-o-nel and the lady with their idea on the woman question, the Armenians with their bizarre music, the Yankee with his freaky humor, and tho sedentary gold dust twins from Kansas, and a great boat load of others like them in their striking differences of ideals and notions, all hurrying across the world to help in the great fight for democracy, which, in its essence, is only the right to live in the world, each man, each cult, each race, each blood and each nation after its own kind. And about all the war involves is the right to live, and to love one's own kind of women, one's own kind of music, one's own kind of humor, one's own kind of philosophy; knowing they are not perfect and understanding their limitations, trusting to time and circumstance to bring out the fast colors of life in the eternal wash.

This is a different kind of provincialism. It is willing to recognize other provincialisms and that one's own is not perfect. It has a real sense of humor and an open mind.

But there is more to it than that. A little incident on the boat gives a glimpse of another facet of the localism of our friends: One night they get distress signals from another boat, and to their astonishment the Espagne speeds away as fast as possible. That was because the distress signals might have been a U-boat lure. It is a favorite trick of the Germans. The incident moves Henry to reflection:

> I've been thinking about this U-boat business; how it would be if we had the Germans' job. I have been trying to think if there is any one in Wichita who could go out and run a U-boat the way these Germans run U-boats, and I've been trying to imagine him sitting on the front porch of the Country Club or down at the Elks Club talking about it; telling how he lured the Captain of a ship by his distress signals to come to the rescue of a sinking ship and then destroyed the rescuer, and I've been trying to figure out how the fellows sitting around him would take it. They'd get up and leave. He'd be outcast as unspeakable, and no brag or bluff or blare of victory would gloss over his act. We simply don't think the German way. We have a loyalty to humanity deeper than our patriotism. There are certain things self-respecting men can't do and live in Wichita. But there seem to be no restrictions in Germany.

Now this homely bit of visualization of the Wichita Country Club and the hypothetical bragging of one of Wichita's citizens about sinking a rescuing ship expresses the American spirit in this war as simply and as poignantly as it could be expressed. It is absolutely genuine and sincere. It tells you more about why we are in the war than the perusal of a score of White and Green and Blue papers can tell you, or the international lawyers or the expounders of egotism in German philosophy. It is because Germany has acted in a way that Wichita and Emporia simply couldn't stand. And it makes you feel rather warm and comfortable about Wichita and Emporia.



Henry and his friend go to Paris and stop at the Ritz—which makes every one smile, for they are so obviously from Wichita and Emporia. And then, with their departure for the front their real adventure begins. They see battle. They see the land that has been scarred and churned by shellfire. They sleep in Red Cross hospitals where thousands of men have passed through, many of them on the "long journey." They see death and suffering and heroism. There isn't much joking in this part of the book. The description is tense and spare and vivid. They tell of Germans shelling hospitals. They learn an inspiring lesson for the race:

> That Courage—that thing which the Germans thought was their special gift from Heaven, bred of military discipline, rising out of German Kultur—we know now is the commonest heritage of men. It is the divine fire burning in the soul of us that proves the case for democracy. For at base and underneath we are all equals. In crises the rich man, the poor man, the thief, the harlot, the preacher, the teacher, the laborer, the ignorant, the wise, all go to death for something that defies death, something immortal in the human spirit. Those truck drivers, those mule whackers, those common soldiers, that doctor, these college men on the ambulance, are brothers tonight in the democracy of courage. Upon that democracy is the hope of the race, for it bespeaks a wider and deeper kinship of men.

Throughout the book runs a thread of fictional narrative about a young American nurse, whom Henry and his friend sportfully name "The Eager Soul," and her two suitors, the "Gilded Youth" and a young doctor. We are told later that the young doctor symbolizes the spirit of America in the war, and the nurse, the idealism of youth. The story leavens the description of trench and hospital. But the significance of the book lies elsewhere—in the viewpoint of Wichita and Emporia. Henry and his friend may be provincial in trivialities; but in the things of the heart and spirit their reach is as wide as the ocean.

THE UNWILLING VESTAL

THE UNWILLING VESTAL. By Edward Lucas White. E. P. Dutton & Co.

IMPERIAL Rome, the Rome of power and splendor and stateliest pageantry, where marble columns rose against the blue sky and the smoke of the sacrifice ascended to heaven from countless altars, is the scene of this new novel by the author of "El Supremo." Imperial Rome, and in that period which Gibbon declared to have been the one of all others most desirable to live in—the reign of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. As the story covers a space of more than thirty years, it closes in the early days of Commodus, a Commodus, however, with some good qualities still remaining, a Commodus not yet wholly brutalized. In this splendid Rome Marcus Brinnarius Epulo was a wealthy and distinguished patrician; wherefore his daughter Brinnaria was entirely eligible for the high honor of becoming a priestess of Vesta, one of those six Vestal Virgins who tended the all-important sacred fire, and were, with the single exception of the Empress, the most important ladies in the empire. But Brinnaria had no desire to be one of them, despite all their many honors and privileges, for though not yet quite 10 years old, she was extremely precocious, and already deeply in love with a boy a little older than herself, one Caius Segontius Almo. But despite Brinnaria's precocity and cleverness and strong will, events proved too much for her, and a Vestal she became. This circumstance, her fidelity to Almo, whom she knew she could, and was resolved she would, marry at the end of her thirty years' service, and his absolute fidelity to her, make the essence of the plot.

The book, however, is one of those in which the plot

well and to like greatly. Norah is an attractive heroine, and her comradely relations with her brother are pleasant to read of, and give an additional bit of charm to her agreeable personality. A very different individual is Mrs. Keeling, one of those stupid, indolent, phlegmatic women Mr. Benson understands and draws so well. "She did not argue, she did not struggle, she just remained" declares the author, hers being "an inertia of dead weight" nearly impossible to move. An "inane and comfortable" woman she was, with an inexhaustible flow of words. Her confused, inconsequent discourses are most amusing to read, but those obliged to listen to her day after day would have been thoroughly justified, one feels, in strangling her.

Alice, the pathetic, silly daughter, a predestined old maid, is at once ridiculous and pitiful, and her affair with the clerical flirt, Mr. Silvertale, while comic in a way, incites the reader's ire, making him detest that skipping, pawing, baby-talking, hand-squeezing, self-advertising cad quite as thoroughly as does his creator. The scenes between these two are as cleverly developed, in their very different way, as are those between Norah and Keeling, while the dénouement is in each instance satisfying because it is entirely natural. It is scarcely necessary to comment now upon Mr. Benson's ability to present the daily life of an English country town; the picture of Bracebridge and its inhabitants is very deftly sketched, and Mrs. Keeling's encounter with the Royal Princess who came to open the new wing of the hospital is entertaining. On the whole, it is an impression of deftness, of skilled craftsmanship, which is the dominating one given by this agreeable novel—a quiet, sometimes appealing, sometimes humorous story, smoothly written, very well-bred, never particularly moving, perhaps, but always interesting.

FIVE TALES

FIVE TALES. By John Galsworthy. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

THE irony of life is ever present to John Galsworthy. Sometimes it is social, and human beings stand in tragic relief against the background of law, custom, convention to which they cannot conform and over which they cannot triumph. Sometimes the picture is personal—more often, in these later days—the presentation of individual conflicts and problems and ideals. Always it is full of human pity. And always, of course—because it is irony—it meets the theme that the author has put on the title page of his latest book, "Life Calls the Tune—We Dance."

Of the five tales that make up this volume, two are haunting tragedies, sharp, ironic, unforgettable. "The First and the Last" is the picture of two brothers, one a successful lawyer of irreproachable habits, unblemished integrity, fine and direct self-discipline; the other a drifter, imaginative, simple, unstable, who has committed a murder to protect the wastrel woman whom he loves. They are types that Galsworthy has pitted against each other more than once, and here, as always, the tragic irony lies in the simple and often-forgotten fact that life is not drawn in blacks and whites only, but mostly in grays. Larry, the ne'er-do-well, dies because it is impossible for him to let an innocent man die for what he has done, and the woman who loves him dies with him. But they die in vain. The successful man, the estimable citizen, the man of will and self-control, cannot let his own name be smirched. As for Larry—"he had no will, no purpose, and he was dead." For himself—"Oh! Not Like Larry! Oh!" Yet these are no mere types, figures in a satire; they are human beings suffering.

"The Apple Tree," is very different, a simple, hopeless little story of a young man to whom the Springtime came in the person of a lovely country girl under an apple tree and who, reminded suddenly of the differences between them, the impossibility of marriage or any lasting companionship, decided to "do right" before it was too late; he left the girl, and it killed her. That is all there is to it. It is not an argument. It is a story, the simplest presentation of an unanswerable and despairing complexity. Characteristically, Galsworthy sends young Ashurst straight from his haunting, wordless overwhelming Springtime into the cool and comfortable domesticities of an English family. With a strange and ironic inversion, the story reminds one of "Torrents of Spring."

It is a far cry from these to the satire and the human frustration of "The Juryman," the only one of the five tales that makes any reference to the war. Here is the note upon which the short story begins:

> Despite the war he had enjoyed these last two years more than any of the ten since he built "Charmleigh" and settled down to semi-rural domesticity with his young wife. There had been a certain piquancy, a savor added to existence by the country's peril and all the public service and sacrifice it demanded. His chauffeur was gone, and one gardener did the work of three. He enjoyed—positively enjoyed—his committee work; even the serious decline of business and increase of taxation had not much worried one continually conscious of the national crisis and his own part therein. The country had wanted waking up, wanted a lesson in effort and economy; and the feeling that he had not spared himself in these strenuous times had given a zest to those quiet pleasures which, at his age, even the most patriotic could retain with a good conscience. He had denied himself many things—new clothes, presents for Kathleen and the children, travel, and that pineapple house which he had been on the point of building when the war broke out; new wine, too, and cigars, and membership of the two clubs which he had never used in the old days. The hours seemed fuller and longer, sleep better

"So They Could Not Trail Me By My Blood"

YOU Americans who want to know how a plain young Chicago boy can play tricks with the German army—read this true tale by Lieutenant Pat O'Brien. The Hun couldn't hold him—this young daredevil American boy. How will they hold those others—those millions like Pat O'Brien who are now "over there" or on their way?

This is what Pat O'Brien did—or part of it. He fell in his aeroplane 8,000 feet into the German lines. He was nearly dead, but they couldn't kill him. They started him on the way to prison. All they had to hold him was a train going 35 miles an hour and four armed guards. But that couldn't hold our young man. He leaped from the window of the flying train.

Then for 72 days he ran and hid and crawled and swam and cajoled and fought—through Luxembourg—through Belgium—to,—but read the story yourself.

Outwitting The Hun

of the Royal Flying Corps.

No wonder the King of England gave him so much time—no wonder the English and the Dutch went wild over him—no wonder American audiences are listening to him spellbound. For this is a real hero—a modern musketeer—the kind of American that Andrew Jackson would have loved.

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

a magnificently vivid and spiritual rendering of the transition from the life of campus and town to the life and death of trench and hospital; the second half, "The Faun's Holiday," is a delightful pagan idyl written with all the lush beauty of Keats, and a certain robust humor that Keats did not know. The juxtaposition has a curious effect; it is like plunging from the murk of a charnel house into the delicious coolness of a still wood.

It is fairly safe to say that no poet has written with such dramatic intensity of the war. Rupert Brooke's sonnets breathe the calm nobility of the resolute high soul, but they were written in 1914, before their writer had tasted war. So with Alan Seeger. But this author runs the whole gamut. Hear the titles: "The Summons," "Farewell to Place of Comfort," "The Approach," "The Day's March," "Nearer," "Battle," "Night Bombardment," "Battery Moving to a New Position from Rest Camp," "Dawn," "Eve of Assault," "Infantry Going Down to Trenches," "The Assault." The last named is a terrific description of battle. You know the incipient fear, the indecision, the hysteria of charging, and then the "cool madness" of conflict. It is as vivid as a cinema. Significantly enough and superbly dramatic, the very next poem is called "The Last Morning." The poet has been wounded:

> Come now, O Death,
> While I am proud,
> While joy and awe are breath,
> And heart beats loud!

After the terrible clangor of battle you are grateful for this pool of dead-stillness.

You know when you read these poems that their author has been through it all. You feel the lassitude and ennui in the first poems, there is a hint of "the burning forehead and the parching tongue" in the lines:

> Put by regret
> For summons missed, or thou hast missed them all.

Standing on a hillside on the "golden eve" of departure pride and courage come:

> O bronzen pines, evening of gold and blue,
> Steep mellow slope, brimmed twilit pools below,
> Hushed trees, still vale-dissolving in the dew,
> Farewell! Farewell! There is no more to do.
> We have been happy. Happy now I go.

And then comes France and the details of marches, encampments, trench life. There is the weariness, the breaking nostalgia for home, but always the transfiguring sense of consecration to a noble aim. Here are a few lines from a poem called "Nearer":

> Heads forget heaviness,
> Hearts forget spleen,
> For by that mighty winnowing
> Being is blown clean.

There is an inexpressible sadness in the nostalgia of the following lines:

> Now that I am ta'en away,
> And may not see another day,
> What is it to my eye appears?
> What sounds ring in my stricken ears?
> Not even the voice of any friend,
> Or eyes beloved-world-without-end,
> But scenes and sounds of the countryside
> In far England across the tide:
> An upland field when Spring's begun,
> Mellow beneath the evening sun. . . .

There is an unflinching realism in some of these poems, but there is an unwavering bravery and hope in all of them. I say all—only in one poem, a beautiful dirge for the loss of a friend, is there an unbroken despair, the first despair of passionate friendship ruthlessly broken. It is the utter desolation of the first stanzas of "In Memoriam." But in the final division of the war poems, "Aftermath," there is a recaptured and a deeper peace:

> Out of the Night! out of the Night! O Friends:
> Oh, all my dead, think ye our friendship ends?
> Harold, Kenneth, Dick, many hearts that were true,
> While I breathe breath, I am breathing you.
> Out of the Night! out of the Night! O Souls:
> Give thanks to the Night. Night and Day are the Whole,
> I count mere life-breath nothing now I know Life's worth
> Lies all in spending. That known, love Life and Earth.

There is not space to quote from "A Faun's Holiday," which breathes of another world. But it should be plain that the war has given us another poet to place beside the name of Rupert Brooke.

As a fighter he acquitted himself honorably, as his record and his several wounds testify.

As a lecturer he has filled to overflowing the largest halls in the country.

As a patriotic worker he has enlisted hundreds of men, collected thousands of dollars for "smoke" funds and the Red Cross, a million for the Liberty Loan.

As a motion picture star, in a romantic version of his book, "Over the Top," he is twice daily packing a large New York theatre.

But it is as an author that he has become the sensation of a generation.

"Over the Top," the record of his experience on the fighting line, has been bought by many hundreds of thousands, read by enthusiastic millions. His new book, "First Call," is written for the new soldier and his people. There is humor in it, and pathos—but best of all it tells the boy in khaki how to get along and how the folks at home can help him. It is a book of incalculable value, a book that will safeguard our boys in France, a book that will help win the war.

Shot Down Four Times In Four Days

DEAF, dumb and blind — semi-conscious for fifteen days — recovered — then back to the hell that was France—and shot down four times in four days — that is part of the history of Lieutenant E. M. Roberts, the American who joined the Royal Flying Corps and who has given us the greatest of war epics.

He joined as a private — became a dispatch rider—went on bombing expeditions, and finally into the Royal Flying Corps, where he fought until he was retired—"incapacitated by wounds received in action."

What it means to drop through the clouds at two hundred miles an hour; how it feels to fall a mile through the air "not under control" — how the Huns fight—and run away as part of their regular air tactics—what will be done by our aerial fleet when it sails over France—these are some of the features of this great book. Grave and gay by turns, as a brave man may be—an epic of the air — such is FLYING FIGHTER.

If you love simple heroism,—if you would thrill with the deeds of a brave American simply told—if the war is to you an opportunity for realizing greatness, read this book—today.

earned—wonderful, the things one could do without when put to it! * * * The war was going pretty well now; he was no fool optimist, but now that conscription was in force, one might reasonably hope for its end within a year. Then there would be a boom, and one might let one's self go a little. * * *

To Mr. Bosengate, comfortable, domestic, patriotic, a devoted father and a romantically adoring husband, service as a juryman brings a curious awakening, a realization that his happy married life has lacked something after all—a sort of companionship. But when, embarrassed and eager, he takes his new quest to his wife, she misunderstands him; and at last he thinks out a compromise solution:

"Too much for one," he thought. "Too high for one—no getting on top of it. We've got to be kind, and help one another, and not expect too much, and not think too much. That's—all!"

If proof were needed of the mastery with which John Galsworthy creates living human beings for us to know and remember, it is found in the vividness with which we return, in "The Indian Summer of a Forsyte," to characters of an earlier book. It is twelve years since "A Man of Property" was published, but Irene and old Jolyon Forsyte have lost no whit of their livingness in our memories; we simply meet them again—an older Jolyon, a gentler Irene, who brings to the old man a charm "shadowy as afternoon sunlight on those Italian hills and valleys he had loved on his travels." Unlike its four companion pieces, "The Indian Summer of a Forsyte" is a sweet and tender episode; and its telling is very beautiful.

"The Stoic" is a grim picture enough of an old man who refused to give up the mastery of life. Galsworthy's poignant characterization lives in "Five Tales," and with it the artist's deep feeling and power.

THE RIDER IN KHAKI

THE RIDER IN KHAKI. By Nat Gould. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.25.

ENTHUSIASTIC reports from England tell us that in point of popularity "all living writers are headed by Nat Gould." Beatrice Harraden is authority for the statement that however the wounded soldier might be suffering, "the name of Nat Gould would always bring a smile to his face." Two thousand copies of Nat Gould's novels, we are further informed, have been ordered by the American Red Cross for our boys "over there." With "The Rider in Khaki" we have Nat Gould's introduction to America.

"The Rider in Khaki" is a story of horse-racing and the war. Alan Chesney, son of a rich brewer, and owner of a beautiful estate near the Dukeries, keeps a large stable, and is really more interested in his horses than in anything else. His neighbor is Evelyn Berkeley, "perhaps one of the most conspicuous of the reigning beauties," as one of his friends says. In a lodge on his estate live old Tom Thrush and his pretty daughter Jane; and to the nearby village comes a stranger, a surveyor, to make plans of the surrounding roads. The story opens in the Summer of 1914, and these characters, together with a group of horse-loving, horse-racing folk, are the principal people in the tale. The plot has two distinct chains of incident—the adventures of Alan, who goes to war, is in grave danger, escapes, and gets home in time to ride a famous horse and win a famous race before he returns to the trenches; and the strange doings of the surveyor before and after his marriage to Jane.

It is not difficult to understand why such books as these should be popular with young Englishmen—especially, perhaps, with soldiers in their idle hours. "The Rider in Khaki" is full of the conversation and the incidents of the turf and its "gentleman riders," marked by a sincere love of horses. It has a thread of war intrigue besides, and several moments of real excitement. It is eminently "easy reading," with few descriptions and a good deal of casual talk. It is wholly objective, wholly unsentimental for all its lightly sketched love story. It is decidedly a "man's book"—a young man's book, at that. But there seems no reason to predict a like popularity in this country. "The Rider in Khaki" is an innocent and fairly interesting tale, told with a certain boyish simplicity. Its English scenes, sporting interest, viewpoint, may well make good reading for the Englishman at home, and spell Blighty to the soldier in the Flanders mud. But the novel has not enough merit as a piece of writing to bear transplanting easily. Its people are but the figures in a story, and the story shows the marks not only of being manufactured but manufactured in haste and without much care. Its style is naïve to the point of childishness. Of distinction it has none.

THE BEST PEOPLE

THE BEST PEOPLE. By Anne Warwick. New York: The John Lane Company. $1.50.

PRETTY, gay, restless Nancy Graydon was only 26 when the death of a generally "unsatisfactory" husband left her absolutely "free." She had had, it seems, no positive quarrel with "James," but he had been commonplace, exacting, unresponsive to all in Nancy that demanded something more inspiring in existence than housekeeping and the gossip, clubs, rivalries, and petty interests of a Middle Western "small town." So when his death left her financially as well as personally independent, Nancy packed up and went to Japan to visit a friend who had married into "diplomatic circles" in Tokio.

There was a good deal to be said for Nancy. Her parents had been, so to speak, "intellectuals," her youth had been spent in wandering the world over in the most stimulating of company. She was still very young when they died and she married and went back to live in Brinnsville, where she had been born, but she could not make herself fit happily into Brinnsville horizons; she could not share the keen interest of her neighbors in the burning question of whether Lily Moore or Marie Taylor would be President of the Woman's Club—and if Marie was elected would Lily ever speak to her again? She had two real friends in Brinnsville—a fine woman who had lost her money and was working in an office, and a public-spirited man whom she admired and liked, but refused to marry. They were not enough to hold her when fate left her free to seek what she thought would be a satisfying and inspiring mode of life.

It wasn't. That, amusingly, cleverly, always interestingly, is the basis of the plot of Anne Warwick's new novel. Nancy's wanderings, her new friendships, her romantic adventures, are all brightly sketched in the form of letters and diaries. There is enough substantial incident in the story to hold the reader's attention, but its real charm is in the cleverness with which the author tells the tale of Nancy's disillusionment. A bit of "light reading" is "The Best People," yet a story with a foundation of human understanding and common sense.

THE ROD OF THE SNAKE

THE ROD OF THE SNAKE. By Vere Shortt and Frances Mathews. New York: The John Lane Company. The Bodley Head. $1.40 net.

IT is a daring literary experiment to superimpose the Obi magic upon the Paris of today. This is what the authors of "The Rod of the Snake" have done with as much verisimilitude as is possible to the impossible. The story begins with an attractive picture of a young Irish brother and sister, scapegraces both, and, being orphans, much meddled with by disapproving relatives. The boy of 22 takes the bit in his teeth, shakes the dust of Ballybar from his feet, and departs into a life of freedom and adventure. We meet him again five years later, after "three years' service in the Cape Mounted Rifles and two years' knocking about Europe." He turns up in a café in Paris, talking with a friend, Lieutenant Revelle, and is suddenly impressed by the appearance of an officer who, Revelle tells him, is Captain Achille de Brissac of the Haitian Army, a man destined to play a sinister part in the tale that follows. Its keynote is struck by a serpent-carved ironwood stick taken from a dead native in South Africa, and when Charlie Shandross, the hero, picks up in the street a small ebony image of an ape "diabolically clever in its suggestion of arrested life," black magic begins to permeate what has hitherto been a story of life under normal conditions. While that very difficult element has been remarkably well managed, the reader's mind is conscious of no small jolt as it passes to and fro between the natural, and what, for want of a more accurate term, we must call the supernatural side of the tale.

The working of the Powers of Darkness, with the tragic issues that follow, commands one's absorbed interest; but, when we note the charm of the pages that deal with normal people and conditions, we wish we might ask from the creator of "The Rod of the Snake" a novel dealing with things as they are. Alas, in her touching preface Mrs. Mathews tells us how it happens that her name is associated with her brother's upon the title page. Having written but half of the book she has so well completed, Captain Shortt fell "in the great push at Loos," adding another to the long list of brilliant men who have exchanged the promise of earthly laurels for the apotheosis of a soldier's death.

A story so unusual and so ingenious as "The Rod of the Snake" is sure of its public. It is to be hoped Mrs. Mathews will follow it with tales eschewing the abnormal, for she, as well as her brother, depicts real life and character, especially the Irish life and character, with much freshness and power.

Miss May Lamberton Becker, in The New York Evening Post, says in recommending this book: "Personally I prefer Soldiers' Spoken French. Its method of approach has much of the vivacity that distinguishes the new methods of group instruction of soldiers, the phrases are well chosen, and the size convenient for the pocket."

QUERIES AND ANSWERS

ANSWERS BY THE EDITOR

A. B.—Have been informed that "Christine," by Alice Cholmondeley, a book of letters supposed to have been written by the author's daughter Christine, is not true.

Would you kindly give me what information you can on this?

There has been a sharp controversy about "Christine" ever since the book was published, involving the authorship of the volume and the authenticity of the letters of which it is composed. In THE BOOK REVIEW of Sept. 23, 1917, there appeared an editorial concerning the questions as to the author of "Christine" and the authenticity of the letters; which were given out as having been written by a young student of the violin in Germany to her mother in England during the Summer of 1914. Several letters about the volume appeared in THE BOOK REVIEW, including one from the Macmillan Company, publishers of the book, to the effect that the author was entirely unknown to the publishers and that all arrangements for the publication had been made through a lawyer, who has throughout maintained a professional silence. "The book merited publication," wrote the publishers, "whether it was fact or fiction. It was offered by a reputable lawyer, and to maintain that it should not be published because the author preferred to remain unknown or because there was no proof of the genuineness of the work seems unreasonable."

"The Sons of the Sires"

G. J. HALL.—Can you tell me who was the author of "The Sons of the Sires; a History of the Rise, Progress and Destiny of the American Party, &c." Philadelphia, 1855, and has the book any value? There are many things in it applicable to the present time.

This book may have been written by Louis C. Levin, who died in Philadelphia in 1860. He represented the Native American Party in Congress from 1845 to 1851, and is said to have founded the party. One of our readers may be able to give the author. The book is not of special value.

From "The Tempest"

FLORENCE EDNEY.—I would be glad if you would give me the full quotation which ends "makes strange bedfellows."

The quotation asked for by our correspondent is: "Misery acquaints a man with strange bedfellows," and it is from "The Tempest," Act II., Scene 2.

"The Democratic Review"

J. A. M.—Kindly inform me whether "The Democratic Review" of 1841, 1842, 1843, and 1844, with articles by Walt Whitman, Edgar Allan Poe, Hawthorne and other writers, has any special value. The volumes are in good condition.

They are worth about 50 cents a volume. The numbers containing articles by Poe, Whitman, and Hawthorne have a slight special value.

ANSWERS FROM READERS

R. J.—The novel that "I. M. V. R." is seeking must be "Ida May," (Boston, 1854,) published under the pen name, "Mary Langdon." The author was Mary Hayden Green Pike, a native of Eastport, Me., wife of Frederick A. Pike, who was a member of Congress in the 'sixties. The writer of a song entitled "Ida May" is sometimes confounded with her.

Information about the book was also received from Walter C. Hill, Brooklyn; Frederick Bostwick, New Haven, Conn.; Joseph Hoehbert, New York; Florence E. Hamplen, Newark, N. J.; Eugenie Wall, East Orange, N. J.; A. S. Corbett, Plainfield, N. J.; Mrs. E. S. Shute, Brooklyn; Caroline A. Pomeroy, Yonkers, N. Y.; J. T. A Wish from India

SUSAN A. HAIGHT.—In reply to "E. W. R." in THE BOOK REVIEW, Feb. 3, I would say that the poem he refers to is by the Rev. Dr. Hume of India. I am inclosing the entire poem, so far as I have seen it, if you care to publish it. The poem is as follows:

May every soul that touches thine,
Be it the slightest contact, yet therefrom some good;
Some little grace, one kindly thought,
One aspiration yet unfelt, one bit of courage
For the darkening sky, one gleam of faith
To brave the thickening ills of life,
One glimpse of brighter sky, beyond the gathering mist,
To make this life worth while,
And Heaven a surer heritage.

Hymn by Bishop How

CHARLES HENRY WELLS.—The inquiry of Le Roy Meyers in THE BOOK REVIEW for Jan. 20 regarding lines on a tombstone may be answered by stating that the quotation is the first one of the sixth verse of Hymn 178 of the Episcopal Hymnal—the popular hymn for the Feast of All Saints. The author is the late Bishop Walshame How.

This appeal was also answered by Warren R. Dix, Elizabeth, N. J.; E. H. Henly, Brooklyn; Alice J. Baxter, N. Y.; Mrs. Sherwood E. Hall, White Plains, N. Y.; Mrs. C. S. Tubey, Philadelphia, Penn.; Harold H. Bowman, N. Y.; M. Akerley, N. Y.; M. L. Clark, Elizabeth, N. J.; Mary E. Norris, Morristown, N. J.; Mrs. James M. Garrett, Baltimore, Md.; M. E. God Sleeps in the Stone

N. J. C.—In reply to the query of "M. F." in your issue of Feb. 3, would say that the quotation about which she inquires reads as follows:

God sleeps in the stone, dreams in the animal, and wakes in man.

It is from John Brierley's "On Growing a Soul."

APPEALS TO READERS

CLARENCE E. SHERMAN.—Will some reader kindly give me the title and author of the poem from which the following lines are taken:

A few who have watched me sail away
Will miss my craft from the busy bay;
Some friendly barks that were anchored near,
Some loving souls that my heart held dear,
In silent sorrow will drop a tear—
But I shall have peacefully furled my sail
In moorings sheltered from storm or gale,
And greeted the friends who have sailed before
O'er the Unknown Sea to the Unseen Shore.

In God's Own Smile

J. H. H.—Can any of your readers locate a poem of five stanzas, the first stanza beginning:

In God's own smile, through paths of light,
Down deep, mysterious ways,
Still, still march on the Lords of right.

Paper Caps

J. B. W.—Will some reader be good enough to furnish me with any information concerning the manner in which the paper cap came to be used as the symbol for labor and the laboring man, and what the general connection is between the two ideas.

Two Quotations

J. L. B. W.—Will some reader be good enough to give the sources of the following quotations:

You can glad your child or grieve it,
You can help it or deceive it,
When all is done,
Beneath God's sun,
You can only love and leave it.

And

The pleasant habit of existence, the sweet fable of life.

"Fame"

J. N. M.—Will some reader kindly help me to discover the author of the following lines and the source from which they come?

Fame is a fleeting breath,
Hopes may be false or fond;
But love will be love till death
And perhaps beyond.

BAKER AND HIS TASK

He Has Done Many Good Things, Says Harvard Historian, but Does Not Do Himself Justice as Secretary of War

By ALBERT BUSHNELL HART

COULD you give us your attention for a few minutes, Mr. Secretary of War? It's this way: We know that you are a tireless public servant, a laborious executive, a busy man every moment of whose time is precious; but, then, we are busy, too, and on the same job. You will not refuse to give ear to what millions of your fellow-servants of the public have in their minds and would say if they had the chance.

We bear testimony to your courtesy and good sense; we are good tempered, too, and feel no personal hostility to a man who has given evidence of a desire to deserve well of the republic. Only it's this way with us: We want to have certain things done, we believe they ought to be done, and they've got to be done! Yet you are not doing them.

First of all, we have a right to discuss what you are doing and not doing, because you are our hired man; you are appointed by the President for our benefit, to perform our service, subject to our eventual decision as to whether you have done the best that can be done. There can be no question of our right to inquire into your service, through Congress, through public meetings, and through the press. The United States of America, and all that in them is, belong to the people of the United States of America; and they have an absolute right at all times to know what goes on in the public service, barring the observance of secrecy with regard to military, naval, and, possibly, diplomatic affairs, so long as secrecy is for the public interest.

It's this way: The great constructive operations of the War Department, such as the drafting and assembling of troops, their fitting out, the manufacture of guns, of submarines, of airplanes, of rifles, are matters that cannot be kept secret, and, as a matter of fact, are probably known in more detail and accuracy to our enemies than to most people in the United States.

A meek individual in Massachusetts within a few days wrote to a Boston paper: "If the people do not know all the facts, and I agree that they do not, why should they? The people have intrusted the conduct of their war to their Government, and they must permit the Government to use its best judgment. The Government may have made mistakes, but it has made no mistake in withholding facts that might have depressed the people and made them dissatisfied. Any newspaper that criticises the Administration on that score is animated by destructive partisanship, or something worse."

It's this way with such stuff: Any attempt to treat those matters as sacred subjects, which must not be mentioned on the floor of Congress or alluded to in the public press, is an affront to the intelligence of the American people. Our countrymen are entirely competent to judge for themselves as to the working of their Government, and the effect on their minds of knowing instead of suspecting that some things are not going well. All they ask is to be furnished with accurate, complete statements of things that are known piecemeal to hundreds of thousands.

How do you, how does anybody, suppose that the American people can be held up to their work in this war if rumors go floating about unchallenged that the airplane factories and the shipyards are filled with disorganized and, therefore, inefficient workers? It's this way: If that statement is true, we ought to know it, in order to help correct it; if it is untrue, you ought to give us the facts, so that we may rejoice.

© Underwood & Underwood.

Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War in President Wilson's Cabinet.

Edwin M. Stanton, the Great War Secretary of President Lincoln.

In the next place, it does not satisfy us to be assured that you are honest and patriotic and doing your best. I am honest up to the filing of the last income tax return; I am patriotic, or else I should not undertake the ungracious task of writing this article; I do my best in the sphere to which Providence has appointed me. But I do not claim the ability to carry on a department of war any more than to run a newspaper or a university. It's this way: The question at issue is not whether you are doing your best, but whether anybody in the United States could do better; for this is not a time to be satisfied with even the best work of a good man, if it is not up to the needs of the country. In this crisis we need and are entitled to a Secretary of War that knows how to handle large numbers of men on a great variety of converging tasks.

You have lived a respectable and useful life for forty-six years; but previous to your appointment your sole national service was as private secretary to the Postmaster General, and your responsible administrative experience was gained as City Solicitor of Cleveland for nine years, and Mayor for four years. It might be said that being Mayor of Cleveland is like learning the Russian language: when you have got that far, anything else in the same line is easy. Nevertheless, where have you had opportunity to show the master mind of the administrator who appoints the tasks for a hundred other men and combines their activity into a harmonious effective whole? Grover Cleveland could do that; President Harper of Chicago University could do that; James J. Hill could do it; Edwin M. Stanton could do it; can you do it? If you can, why have you not done it? You are a man capable of rendering great service to your country in many administrative posts; you are not doing yourself justice at the head of the War Department. We might like you as a brother-in-law better than as a husband.

The proof of this statement is what you yourself say about your department and its work. As recently as Jan. 3, before the Senate committee, you assured that committee and through it the United States that the airplane manufacture was going forward well and that airplanes were being shipped to France. On that point we may accept the testimony of Senator Lodge of Massachusetts in the Congressional Record of March 26, as a statesman of great experience, a member of important committees with especial advantages for securing even unwilling information from the departments and a reputation for saying nothing which he cannot back up with proof. He is a better witness than you, because he plainly knows more about your department than you do.

And this is what he says: "The Secretary of War spoke a short time ago of our beginning to send fighting planes to France. He said the number was small, but we had begun to send them. We returned at that time the two French models which we had had here. Since then I believe one American plane has gone; it may be on the water now; it may have been landed—we have not a fighting plane in France. The front where our men are is not defended in the air. We have spent $840,000,000 for airplanes in the past year, and we have not a fighting plane in France. The facts I have recited in regard to airplanes are known to Germany. It is time our people understood them."

Then there is the question of guns which has been before your department ever since you assumed office March 9, 1916. This is what Senator Lodge says, and it is God's truth: "We have no guns in France, except a few old coast guns which we sent out early and for which the French are making carriages. We are using French guns. That is the hard fact."

Senator Poindexter of Washington, who is not always in agreement with Lodge, summed the whole thing up in a sentence: "The substantial fundamental fact in the situation is that we have been engaged for a year in this war, which the Senator from Massachusetts says may ultimately result in a struggle for the independence of this nation, and that we have no airplanes. That is all there is about it."

Now let us bring this issue to a head so that there may be no mistakes. We who censure your administration of the War Department do not claim that you are responsible for making airplanes and big guns with your own hands; nor for the failure of the men directly in charge of the work to come up to the scratch. It's this way: You are the man who took the responsibility of the War Department, and thereby bound yourself to the people to know what was going on in your department—particularly in the one branch of your service where speeding up seemed possible and where the result of the speeding up might turn the scale in Europe. You further made yourself responsible by roseate promises and prognostications. Therefore, we hold you personally responsible for a failure to follow up your own orders; to know for

NEED OF FIVE MILLION MEN NOW

Senator Chamberlain Urges Increase of American Army and Calls for More Publicity—"This Is No One Man's War," He Says, "It Is the People's War"

HOW much better can we do than we have been doing? That is now the great question at Washington, in the headquarters of our supreme industry, War.

Granted that the nation's accomplishments in the first year of the war have been remarkable, what more can America do—in broadening her plans of soldier output and supplies, in converging her energies more wholly on the paramount activity, War?

Criticism of the past and defense of the past drop into the background. The German drive has centred attention at the nation's capital on the urgency of today and tomorrow in war work. It is certain that our allies look to Washington as never before. One striking difference between the United States and these allies is brought to the fore. They have no surplus of resources for war. For many months all their men and material have been focused on one aim, War. In the United States, on the other hand, there is a vast surplus of resources in men and material not yet directly concentrated on war. These potential resources, once brought into action and unified on the single purpose of war, are sufficient, it is recognized on practically every side, to assure the decisive defeat of Germany.

Hence, the new, tremendous insistency of the question—How much more can we do than we have been doing?

Virtually every public man in Washington has revised his opinion as to the necessity of the largest possible war production. Senator George E. Chamberlain, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, when asked the other day what great lesson there was for the people of the United States in the German drive, replied that if man power was to be supplied to defeat the enemy, America must supply it. This, he said, was now plainer than ever before.

"It is not sufficient to send a few hundred thousand men to France," said the Senator, with an emphatic gesture. "In my opinion, in order to succeed, the United States must transport to France 2,500,000 soldiers, with another 2,500,000 in training here, and must be prepared to move forward when the emergency arises. The man who is only ready to prepare for a short war makes a mistake which may involve the destruction of civilization itself. It may be a short war, but preparations should at once be made for a long war."

"How would you proceed—has the President the power to increase the number of men to be trained?"

"In my opinion he has," answered the Senator, "and if there is a question as to this power there has been no suggestion of it. The power is given under the authority to create and train reserve units. But, I repeat, if there is any question about the power in the mind of any one in authority, I am sure Congress will give the power at the mere suggestion of the need and lack thereof. If America has made a mistake, it is that we have not been training men fast enough. The sooner we commence, the sooner the war will be won.'

"But to make such a force of men count against the enemy two things are absolutely essential: First, more, and still more, ships; second, a co-ordination and mobilization of the industrial life of the nation. Without intending to disparage what has already been done to this end, it is absolutely necessary now that these things be done with the greatest possible promptitude."

"What do you propose to do in order to increase the number of ships?"

"First, utilize every shipyard available for construction, whether of steel, wooden, or other ships. There are yards in the Northwest, already established, that are anxious to proceed with ship construction, but for one reason or another, some valid, perhaps, but many entirely frivolous, so much of restriction is placed around construction that nothing is being done by these yards. Tonnage is what is needed, and I am entirely unable to understand why ships may not be built in these yards for private account, or even for account of neutrals, when American needs have been complied with. For every ton put afloat the tonnage necessary for the Allies is to that extent relieved.

"It is but fair to say that there is apparently more centralization of effort in shipbuilding now than there was six months ago, but there is vast room for improvement, in the removal of restrictions and red tape so that those who are anxious to build and who have facilities to do so may go ahead with ship construction under reasonable rules and regulations."

One great drawback in the past, he remarked, had been that the people of the United States had not realized the seriousness of the war.

"Why have they not?" the Senator was asked.

"Because the press and those in authority have indulged in an optimism not warranted by the actual conditions, with the result that the great mass of the people have not been correctly advised. The people only need to have the facts as they really are to form a correct conclusion; that conclusion would naturally be toward a more prompt and more satisfactory preparation to bring the war to a speedy and victorious end. By way of illustration—we find Sir Eric Geddes complaining in England that facts have been withheld with regard to submarine destruction and advising that the facts be given to the public so as to arouse them to the actual needs of the situation. When these facts are given, the patriotic spirit of England is aroused, and the people there are willing to make greater efforts and sacrifices. The same rule must apply to the American people. They must have the facts, and they can be relied on to do all that is necessary to make a successful preparation and fight for democracy and civilization.

"This is no one man's war. It is the people's war, and in order to succeed the people must be kept advised from time to time as to actual conditions and needs. It is gratifying to note that the new Chief of Staff, General March, evinces time in the first half of the twelfth century, it was born from the start to a career of bloodshed and strife. The great waves of Tartary pounded at its walls like a mighty surf during the fourteenth century. Czars, cruel and ruthless, beginning with Ivan Grozni, (the Terrible,) made of Moscow a scourge of barbarism and ferocity. It is said that at no time in no country have so many outrages been perpetrated at one man's command as at Moscow under Ivan the Terrible.

Through sufferings, through fires, through wars, however, Moscow has emerged always more resplendent, always a greater wellspring of Russian life and Russian thought than ever before. Even though Peter the Great decided to move the machinery of government to the swamp in the north, the ancient capital of Muscovy never ceased to be in spirit the real capital of Russia. Peter did not make a new capital; he merely made another capital, Moscow remaining as ever before the leading, most instinctively Russian city of the Russian Empire. The Czars never ceased to be crowned there.

Petrograd, however, just as the unsentimental and businesslike founder intended that it should be, remained ever a "window upon Europe," a window through which darkest Russia could receive the light of Western customs and practices. In other words, Petrograd has never been anything more to Russia than a utility of which foreigners, in fact, were accustomed to make far greater use than Russians. Germany has used that "window" to look in and covet what it beheld more than Russia ever used it to look out upon Germany or the rest of Europe.

The constant dilution of the population with alien and non-Russian elements, the circulation through Petrograd or St. Petersburg of Western ideas and Western ideals, at any rate, made it a European city rather than a Russian city. No special sentiment or attachment has ever brought Peter's capital close to the hearts of the Russian people, and if it fell a hundred times into the hands of the Germans, such a catastrophe could never stir the wave of feeling and emotion that would undoubtedly be evoked from the whole of the Russian people if the enemy took Moscow.

The possibility of an organized resistance around Moscow raises the question as to how the city will emerge from such an event. When the Russians fired it in 1812 the flames swept the dwellings and ate up most of the city with the exception of most of the Kremlin walls, which resisted the flames. The cathedrals fared badly enough, the invaders having started to pillage at once. According to historical account, Bonaparte's soldiers invaded the Cathedral of Assumption and installed in the nave great scales and steelyards. Outside they placed two furnaces which were kept ever burning to melt down the settings torn from sacred pictures, the church vessels, the gilt ornaments, and even the decorations from the priests' robes.

Napoleon himself, piqued and enraged by the reception that the inhabitants of Moscow accorded to him, at first ordered the destruction of the Church of the Protection of the Virgin, but the soldiers decided they could show a more subtle contempt for the Russians by stabling their horses there, which they did, while one of the Marshals, according to a historian, actually lay himself down for a nap in the sanctuary with sentinels on both sides of the "royal doors" of the Ikonastas.

In short, while the interior walls of the cathedrals and palaces and monasteries of the Kremlin were practically denuded of all their ikons and trappings, many of which were recovered on the retreat of the French hosts, the walls of most of the sacred buildings were left standing practically intact—a coincidence which is often accepted by the superstitious Russians as proof that like the great spirit of Russia, Moscow, the fount of that spirit, is immortal and indestructible.

Throughout the course of Moscow's history, through fires, scourges, wars, invasions, there has been something strange and miraculous about her power to arise once more and challenge the sun with her fantastic dancing domes. The mujik will tell you Moscow can never perish—though he may see all the guns of the German Empire lined before the gates about to begin their work of destruction.

Petrograd Art Which May Have Been Looted

Loss of the Famous Raphaels, Murillos, and Rembrandts in Hermitage Museum Would Be Beyond Calculation in Terms of Cash

THE prophecy of the Old Believers, that ancient persecuted sect of Russia, is apparently being fulfilled in the city of Peter the Great. "St. Petersburg will be a desert," their spokesmen told the Emperor when he made his cherished city magnificent. And reports from Petrograd tell us that the city is very like a desert now. What that may mean in the loss or the looting of precious treasures of art it is likely few Americans realize.

We think of Petrograd as a splendid capital rich with the tokens of a rather barbaric past; but the city is far more than that; Peter the Great and his successors made their new capital more than magnificent. Little by little they gathered to it rare examples of Western art—Greek antiquities, exquisite vases and jewels, masterpieces of the great painters of Italy and Spain, Holland, Flanders, and France. It was Peter's ambition to "Europeanize" Russia, and to the new capital he and the monarchs who followed him brought wonderful works of European art. Rich as Petrograd has been in the splendors of Russia and the East, it has been no less notable as one of the great art cities of Europe. It boasts a fine "Russian museum," but it has had reason to be proud, too, of its Raphaels and Murillos and Rembrandts. The Hermitage, the great museum attached to the Winter Palace, has been one of the greatest art galleries in the world.

In Petrograd is, or was, the world's famous masterpieces, but, to quote one succinct authority, "because it includes so many masterpieces of the best period of the various schools of art." On the other hand, it is worth noting that the Hermitage contains practically no representation of German painting.

There are three Raphaels—the exquisite "Alba Madonna," and the lovely little "Madonna Connestabile," which is the smallest Madonna Raphael ever did, and a beautiful "St. George." There is another painting, a "Holy Family," which is ascribed to Raphael, but which is not universally accepted as authentic. There is a Giorgione, a rarely beautiful "Holy Family" by Andrea del Sarto, an "Adoration of the Magi" by Botticelli, several fine Titians, all of his later period, a "Mary Magdelen" being the most important among them; "The Nativity of the Virgin" by Tintoretto, Veronese's "Descent from the Cross," and four especially good examples of the work of Raphael's rival, Sebastian del Piombo. There are beautiful pictures by Guido Reni, Perugino, Fra Angelico, the later Venetians, and many other old masters of Italy. Two paintings are attributed to Leonardo da Vinci. These are only a few of the more notable pictures among the large collection of Italian paintings.

It is in the Spanish, Dutch, and Flemish schools, however, that the Hermitage boasts the greatest number of works by old masters. Murillo's "Immaculate Conception" here is not so well known to

by Owen Johnson

IN France they are dying. They are dying by the thousands and the tens of thousands in that last line of resistance which has never failed—the human wall of free men. The earth rises up beneath them, and death descends upon them from the sky that is no longer free.

Men of Britain's stock, men of Britain's daughters, from Canada, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, and India, from the last outpost of the English tongue, are dying there today. Exiles from Belgium who have not forgotten; men of consecrated France who have not forgotten their pillaged homes, their enslaved women, their grandparents lying on the bleeding ground; men of America who have not forgotten the murdered victims of the Lusitania, who hear again the cries of women and little children; men who are wondering what is going on at home. They are dying by the thousands and the tens of thousands. Their days are without nights, their weeks without end. The blood of all that love, liberty, right, and human ideals is being spilt over there, our blood, while we are making up our minds how much to subscribe!

Each Liberty Loan goes out to that burning front line as a message from home. No sophistries and no excuses, no explanations can obscure the truth if our response be half-hearted, hesitant, reluctant. No traitor's intrigue here, no distortion abroad, can dull the force of the message, if the great Liberty Loan comes rolling up from village and city, from farm and prairie, with the accumulating grandeur of a tidal wave. For this Liberty Loan is not in the speech of politicians and diplomats. It is the voice of the people. One way or the other its meaning will be unmistakable.

As I write, the free world is going through its passion tide of suffering. Only those nations who are capable of suffering for the right, who are willing to suffer, who find suffering for an ideal heroic and sanctifying, have a right to existence.

If today any one still sneakingly admires government without conscience, despotism without humanity and the efficiency of scientific savagery; if his heart is craven and he believes the forces of evil cannot be stood off without too great sacrifice; if he believes that American ideals are no longer worth dying for; if in his secret mind he prefers to cling to his own existence and his own comforts even under a new slavery; if any one still believes such monstrous things, let him not subscribe a single dollar; for a coward's dollar has no right in this offering of a proud nation.

But if you are of the race that has fought and died for the things that make life worth living, if you have in your veins the hatred of wrong, a just anger; if you have the pride of country, the loathing for unspeakable barbarism; the will to resist no matter what the strength of tyranny; if you are unafraid, unflinching, resolute, thrilled; if you are an American with your coat off and your sleeves rolled up, this Liberty Loan is your message to the front. Don't contribute; that means nothing. Give, until you deprive yourself to give, until you, too, bear your part in the suffering of the world that is bleeding for your liberties.

Each day we wait breathlessly the message from the front, knowing that the fate of the world hangs on the determination of men to die when the time to die has come, that a greater thing may live. Each day, we who are here are living in this dread suspense. Remember this when you start to subscribe. Over there they, too, are waiting each day for the message from home; waiting breathlessly, wondering if it is a nation worth dying for.

Need of Five Million Men Now

a disposition to greater publicity in our military affairs.

"We have the needed resources in men and material, and think what a speeding up to take advantage of these resources would mean—the hastening of the conclusion of the war and, consequently, the eventual saving of hundreds of thousands of human lives and of millions of dollars of wealth; it would mean the assured success of the Allies and a peace dictated by those who are interested in making the world safe for democracy and in the destruction of military force and power."

At the apex of the problem, said Senator Chamberlain, was the unsolved matter of centralization, unity of control and direction; it was a need easy to see, but not easy to attain, as was shown by the long and costly delay in achieving unity of command of the armies of the Allies, brought about at last, apparently, by the pressure of a great crisis.

"This can only be accomplished, as I have said before," continued Mr. Chamberlain, "by the concentration of power in the hands of a man, or a limited number of men, to be appointed by the President, who have made records for accomplishment. They must have the power to act promptly and finally in every preparation that the emergency calls for. The great trouble has been in lack of coordination and authority, with no fixed central responsibility. There must be one head composed of one or a limited number of persons, under the direction of the President, who is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. Then there would be a fixed responsibility for action or inaction.

"Reorganizations are taking place in the War Department which are bettering the situation very much, but still greater reorganization and concentration of effort are necessary to utilize the power both industrially and otherwise to enable America to do what it is possible for her to accomplish."

When he was asked what he thought of the airplane production situation, Senator Chamberlain said:

"I think we have been a little slow, but I believe, in the last analysis, that this very tardiness has given us an opportunity to develop an engine as well as a 'plane' for the work necessary to be done.

"There is no discounting now the importance of the rapid production of an airplane of the highest efficiency as a factor for our success in this war. The last three years have been practically a period of progressive evolution of the airplane, but it is now approaching a stage of perfection which makes it possible that squadrons in the air rather than armies on the ground will determine the struggle. American ingenuity and enterprise may be relied upon, I think, to play their part in perfecting and sending over to the battle front a sufficient quantity of machines to do the work.

"In what I have said in this interview I want it understood that I am not undertaking to criticise but merely to suggest a few thoughts that are uppermost in my mind as to what the present grave situation calls for. I will end by emphasizing this thought: We can and must win this war, and the quickest way to do it is the best way."

How a North Carolina City Emulates the Thrifty Squirrel

BE a squirrel this year!"

That is the motto for 1918 which has been adopted and is being put into effect by the City of Winston-Salem, N. C. Its purpose is to aid the people of Winston-Salem in doing their full share toward winning the war, and, incidentally, toward making life less uncertain in the Winter of 1918-19.

According to the teachings of natural history the squirrel is a farsighted creature, which employs the days of Summer and Fall in laying up a store of nuts and other edibles for the Winter months, when snow covers the ground and makes foraging precarious. And the people of Winston-Salem propose to emulate the squirrel, to employ the months between now and snowtime in laying up food and fuel against the days of need and lack of transportation facilities. But they make it very plain that this is no unpatriotic hoarding plan. It is a practical application of the common sense displayed by the squirrel.

In order to secure the results in mind Winston-Salem has begun a systematic organization of the city and the country surrounding it. This organization has been named the Squirrel Club. Its President is the Mayor of the city. Assisting him is an Executive Committee made up of the members of the city administration and the County Commissioners. The membership of the club, it is hoped, will eventually include every man, woman, and child in Winston-Salem and the country surrounding it.

The organization machinery of the Board of Trade has been called into play. Progress has already been made toward reaching every home and urging the desirability of looking ahead both as to food and fuel. Every home is being urged to do its share along the lines of production as well as conservation. The wider cultivation of backyard and vacant lot gardens is being advocated for the individual householder and for schools and groups of children and adults. Following this will come the educational work and agitation for the drying and canning of foodstuffs on a greater scale.

The plan will also be laid before coal dealers, woodyards, farmers' organizations, produce men, flouring mills, the Salvation Army, and the Associated Charities. The plan is to be developed along community co-operative lines so that all may work in one general direction and not hinder each other by striving at cross purposes. In the co-operative phase it is expected that the committees and departments of the Board of Trade will prove particularly valuable.

The work of greater production and community conservation is to be carried on actively all through the Spring, Summer, and Fall. On Dec. 1 a general mass meeting is to be called by the Mayor at which time the club officials will give their reports. The people of Winston-Salem believe that by carrying out this program they need have no fear of difficulties next Winter. They believe that they will have laid up sufficient food and fuel to supply all their needs for the Winter and possibly be the proud possessors of a surplus.

Winston-Salem claims to be the originator of the Squirrel Club plan as a practical solution of the problem of food and fuel, but it is not selfish and is willing that every city and community in the country should follow its example. Any community interested can secure information by writing to the city officials or to the Board of Trade.

Tests for "Converted and Secret Americans"

By Their Excuses and Specious Arguments Are They Known—The "We Should Forgive Our Enemies" and "I Am for America, but Not for England" Types

By ALFRED M. BROOKS.

Mr. Brooks, who is Professor of Fine Arts in the University of Indiana, wrote this article at the request of the National Security League to arouse the people of the country to a realization of the true meanings of the war and the menace of defeat.

THERE is a story of one of the souls in Dante's Purgatory who says, while recounting his life on earth—he had lived in the days when Christianity was young and struggling, and paganism was yet strong—"Through fear I was a secret Christian."

In other words, this weakling soul had not stood up for the faith which was in him. He had not allowed himself to be counted on the side on which he really was, because such standing up would have told against his popularity, as it always does. In much the same way, there were many souls, prior to last April and the declaration of war on Germany by the United States, who elected to live in the No Man's Land of opinion, so far as concerned standing up for their secret faith that war against the German savages was essential to the salvation of their country's decency and honor.

They managed also to remain strangely oblivious to the question of the salvation of their personal decency and honor as it was affected by their attitude toward Germany's first sentence in her war creed, "Necessity knows no law," and her initial acts of theft, rape, and murder in Belgium. These souls were legion. Everybody knew them. They believed their own good name by writing themselves down among the "neither hot nor cold."

And there are souls among us who have not even yet been converted, or, if they have been, are still keeping the fact secret. These last are the strangest of all. For the living, struggling present they are the really important ones. They are those Secret Americans who, at this moment, are either giving the lie to themselves or, what is far more apt to be the fact, sneakingly befriending the Germans. While, no doubt, some of these are not actual traitors, all of them are such potentially, and, therefore, not to be trusted. They belong to the same group; the group made up of pacifists and all other pro-Germans. To waste breath distinguishing between these two reminds one of Dr. Johnson's famous remark upon the futility of discussing precedence in the case of a flea and a louse.

There are three excuses, none of them satisfactory, which can be put forth in behalf of these craven souls: The poor excuse of natural dullness; the poorer excuse of wishing to be absolutely fair, of seeing every side, and so, in the end, taking none; the poorest excuse of all, that, as so many of them still say, of "just not being able to read about the war, it is so terrible." All three are equally foolish and equally to be feared. The point to be remembered is that a fool is always Satan's ready tool. Whatever we do we should never allow the gentle answer of the Secret Americans to turn away our wrath, or their self-assumed cloak of innocence and martyrdom to deceive us. Every one of them is a blubbering sentimentalist or a hypocrite. In either case they are the comforters of Germany and our enemies.

We should not accept all outward conversions for true ones. This is not saying that there are no true ones, or that we should banish faith from all our calculations and dealings. There is, however, one infallible sign of true conversion. It is a sweet-tempered acceptance of the doubts and innuendo cast upon the convert's professed loyalty, along with a hearty and, so far as may be, self-effacing zeal in helping, by every word and act, to discredit and defeat Germany; primarily by speaking well of England. All this requires a good deal of a saint, we confess. But real conversion means being far advanced on the road to righteousness. That is why it is so difficult and so rare. These converts, real and false alike, say, and with much truth:

"If we do not come out plainly you call us traitors; if we do, you call us liars." The answer is as easy to give as it is heavy to bear. You are yourselves to blame. Your only rôle is that of the uncomplaining and the unresentful. It is part of the penance you have laid on yourselves by your own acts; by such acts as approving the invasion of Belgium, justifying the sinking of the Lusitania, condoning the deportations, and minimizing generally the hundred other unjust and inhuman acts of Germany in the war.

Professor Alfred M. Brooks, Who Says That Americans Not Whole-Heartedly for Our Prosecution of War Are Blubbering Sentimentalists or Hypocrites.

So much for converted Americans. Now for the considerable, as well as contemptible, class of secret Americans. The only safe rule is to regard all of these as unconditional traitors. But what we need more than rules for regarding them is a rule for detecting them. The lair of these craven beasts is everywhere. At one time he is an ex-college President, and again he is an editor. Now he is a minister, now a professor, now a grade teacher. Frequently he is the well-to-do citizen, in business, or retired; sometimes the rich widow of a publisher, or a Judge. Every community has some of them; known or doubtful suspects they may be termed. Every one of them is the enemy of humanity, and of that which is the proof and memorial of humanity throughout the ages, art. "Friends of Kultur," or the "German-American Alliance," is the name of the society in which they all hold open or concealed membership.

It matters not whether they have ever set foot across the threshold of any "German House," "Deutsches Haus," in the country—those institutions for the spread of German Kultur which the members of the "German-American Alliance" have been for years so busy founding and equipping at the various seats of learning throughout the United States and in many of our cities. I was myself told by a member of the German Department of the State University of Indiana within two months after the opening of the war that I, together with a few of my colleagues, "had cost the university $50,000 by anti-German talk in regard to the Belgian invasion." I asked how, and was told that certain rich Germans in the State had been deterred, by our rash and unwarranted remarks, from carrying out their generous plan to build and equip a German House on the university campus. This story has since received confirmation of its truth. To what unpatriotic ends such diverted dollars, not necessarily these particular dollars, have since been put is matter too generally known to call for contempt.

Now what are some of the distinguishing earmarks of the Secret American—those, first of all, who maintain that they are not called upon to state where they stand, since to doubt their stand is to accuse them, by implication, of being unpatriotic; an implication at which every spark of their ignoble manhood bursts into a flame of very edifying indignation. This is precisely the stand which the college professor took who later was turned out because he opposed the Liberty Loan, or defamed the character of the veterans of the civil war; just what the grade teacher did who lost her position for teaching her youthful charges that things German are superior to all other things, and that Germany should be over all; the Kaiser's famous and absurd saying, "We are the salt of the earth." His use of many a sacred phrase has well-nigh reduced it to the level of the words of comic opera chorus. His blasphemy is alone equaled by his audacity. It is what the type of David Starr Jordan did, though he had no place to lose save that which he held in the respect of many of his countrymen, who have felt both grief and rage at his long stand as pacifist.

For the very opposite type we have but to name Henry Ford, whose real conversion he himself has obliged, by his words and his acts, every patriotic American, and and every foe of Germany, to recognize with respect and admiration. The former of these conspicuous men long since proved to the world that he knew fish, and understood them. He has now proved that he does not know human beings. Mr. Ford, despite his profound knowledge of machines, has shown that he knows men and cares for them before all else.

It is unnecessary to enumerate further instances of the Secret American in his many types. They are pretty well known to all who go about with open eyes, and read, and think; who carry the love of freedom in their souls, and the love of fair dealing in their hearts. But how describe them as a class? How learn to know a few characteristics of the class?

They are given to much vague prophesying, the burden of which always bodes ill for any allied undertaking which chances to be on hand. Be it a drive in Italy, or on the western front; an army bill, or a sugar investigation in the Senate, their talk is always meant to make us feel that we are hoping against hope. They speak like Sir Oracle, and inform us that "there's a nigger in the woodpile." They show what they wish for, but they say nothing which will give grounds for charging them with treasonable utterance. They are low-spirited and prone to outbursts of anger, chiefly against the "bungling of the British," thereby showing, "beyond doubt," that we are "traveling the very same road." They tell us that "something unexpected will soon happen."

If they detect a skeptical smile on the face of one of their auditors they are grievously affronted. They seek to keep the air thick with the intellectual dust which rises in clouds from their ceaseless kicking. They seek to darken all counsel by words. They pride themselves on calm of judgment and warn us against "hysteria" as the deadliest sin of the age. Heat of feeling, and force of language in connection with the Germans' taking hostages, or putting women and children in the front line of their advance so that the enemy shall have to shoot down their own wives and babies, is "hysteria," according to them.

The arguments and assertions of this class all go back to a few formulas easy to learn, and easy to detect whenever the war is broached. Once familiar with these formulas and we have an unfailing test of the actual, as well as the potential, traitor; a reagent, so to speak, which immediately makes known the presence of treason. Broach the cause of civilization against savagery; of the world against Germany and Turkey. If you be not met by the eloquent consent of silence, and this is the way of those who best deserve the name of fox, you will be met by the familiar "Well, after all, isn't it six in one and half a dozen in the other?"

Again, "I am for America, but not for England." Or, more academically, but less honestly speaking, "As between Germany and England I am for Germany, but as between Germany and the United States, I am for the United States." The reason why this is so academic, and so intellectually dishonest, is that it assumes the subtle possibility of fighting for a cause—that of the United States—and, at the same time, fighting against a supporter of that cause, in this case England.

Again, finally, and worst of all, "We should forgive our enemies." Here we have more of the accepting of the letter and disregarding of the spirit of a wise saying. If this were to be taken literally it would become our immediate and universal duty to forgive the burglar-murderer, and worse, on his way to the merited punishment which justice, in behalf of decent society, has adjudged to him. It is not hatred which the law and justice, or the citizen who upholds law and justice, have for this burglar-murderer, but abhorrence; not revenge which they wish to visit upon him, but an overwhelming desire to make him, and all his kind, realize that they will not be allowed to live on the earth, or any longer threaten respectable people with their barbarities. And so with Germany, mankind that still esteems purity, truth, honor, justice, loveliness, and good report as being all-precious looks upon her with abhorrence, repugnance, inexpressible loathing, sickening disgust, but not with hatred. She is the burglar-murderer nation, and every man or woman who takes her part in secret is for her and an enemy to the United States and every one of the Allies.

To force all such into the open; to dispel their secrecy by whatever means, so long as the law is not broken, is the patriotic duty of every loyal citizen, as well as doing all that is in his power to speed the complete abasement of the German Nation. The newly and the less recently converted Americans should be glad to do their utmost to bring about this abasement, and remain uncomplaining even when their feelings are—as it is not reasonable to expect they should not be—hurt. And every secert American should learn at once, if he does not already know, that he will increasingly, as time goes on and our men are killed, be looked on as a traitor. Let all such learn to await, and, when it comes, meet, a traitor's fate without a whimper if they persist in this sort of Secret Americanism.

Baseball as Means of Keeping the Doctor Away

How the Expert Batter Needs the Vigor and Sharpened Senses of Perfect Health—A Little Psychology on the Side

RECENTLY, as baseball annals go, a good batter suddenly had a severe "slump." He dropped so far in his batting average that the fickle fans, at first worried, began to yell for his release. This batter was originally a college man, so he decided to consult a psychologist. Examination showed that he had control, excellent eyesight, intelligence, and was a "parallel" batsman. This meant that he was naturally a batter who did not "hit the ball in the air" or chop it downward, but lined out his balls by an even, steady, horizontal stroke, which was parallel to the ground. This is one of the excellent equipments of a good batter.

An examination and experimental tests of memory, muscles, eyes, color, and co-ordination of thought and action disclosed him to be above the average even of professional baseball players. So it was determined to watch him a few weeks in the game. Then the discovery was made. The habit of many seasons had become somehow altered. He no longer swung with ease in a parallel to the ground. Instead he popped flies and hacked the ball toward the ground. The points found, it was necessary to discover what made the change.

On examination again, it was brought out that a few enlarged glands in the neck, from some poor teeth, would become a little sore only when his bat was swung as he had originally trained, namely, on the horizontal. It was not much of a pain, but unconsciously for a month he had avoided that important movement. A batting "slump" was the result. Once the diagnosis was made, despite some delay in the removal of the cause, he resumed the horizontal swing and his restored batting average became apparent.

There is a French proverb which has it that "there are three doctors who do not deceive themselves—merriment, mild exercise, and modest fare."

The Summer months should be days when health is courted to be stored up, as a physical bank account for future use, and, in achieving this, outdoor sports which make for "merriment, mild exercise, and modest victuals" are then more to be desired than great riches. Of all such muscular amusements the bat and ball, as used in the national American game, seem best suited to "slam the door on the doctor's nose." It is not necessary to decry other kinds of outdoor athletics to prove the worth of baseball. Practice at the beginning of the season should be gradual; one must not be impatient to swing a bat before his sluggard, lethargic muscles have been insensibly brought by a week or more of training into a state of mercurial nimbleness and power.

To bat a pitched baseball just where you wish it to go means that your muscles are sensitive as well as strong. It indicates that your arm, hand, and other muscles bow to your will, your judgment, and your resolute intellect. Moreover, when boy or man hit "for a safety" as he intended, it is a sign that the intellect, the muscles, and the sense of motion, sight, and touch are all alert and intertwined co-ordinately the one with the other.

The very fact that the batter met the emergency of the pitcher with his ever-available and harlequin changeableness of delivery indicates the swift, wireless messages sent by the eye to the senses of touch and motion, and muscular control. Ordinary, laggard processes of school desk, professor-like thinking must be done away with at bat as on the firing line. Vision must be keen, the will clean, the judgment quick and the muscles "at bat" as swift as a Tartar's arrow.

To become a good batter, it is not necessary to be born so to have the "batting eye" and swing muscles as birthrights or instincts. A few born Willie Keelers, "Buck" Herzogs and Cobbs there may be, but the majority of good batters, like most poets, playwrights, inventors, and financiers, are made by study and p[illegible], not born. To hit the skillfu[illegible] ball safely is more than [illegible] practice a hit-and-miss sw[illegible] trial-and-error problem. It i[illegible] matter of correcting all eye [illegible], skin affections and physical disabilities as well. There can be no "intuitive batting" if you are color blind, astigmatic, or near sighted; if the sensations of heat and cold, motion and rest are at fault.

Once these are healed and corrected, there is more than a chance that you may discipline and control your sensations and your muscles to such harmonious deeds that what seemed at first impossible, to wit, mastery of the bat, may become something wonderful to behold. Just as the tennis player prefers a particular racquet of fourteen, fifteen, or even eleven ounces, as a golfer clings more to one driver than another, or an aviator to one style of monoplane or biplane, so the embryo, prospective batsman must learn to prefer one style and weight of bat to another.

While it may be true that a good workman, a great artist, or an inventive genius disregards any special instrument, he has more leisure in which to adapt himself and to mold his tissues to "any sort of a club" given into his hands. Not so the batter. His eyes, muscles, skin, and whole anatomy must already be attuned to every nook and cranny of "the stick" he likes best. Then he may with confidence "step up to the plate" ready and primed to meet the greatest pitcher at his best. Then his reaction time will be reduced to a minimum. A batter's reaction time is that interval of delay which is necessary, like a tiger, to crouch or contract his muscles to be prepared to spring at or to receive the enemy—the baseball. It is also called by psycho-physiologists "the latent period."

If the expectant batter's "reaction time" or "latent period" is too slow, he will hit more fouls, more "easy outs," and "punch outs" oftener than another whose muscles are on the qui vive. The best batter, it must be plain, is he whose reaction time is as swift as the flight of light itself. Whenever you see the catcher signal for and the pitcher "shooting a quick one over" when the batter is "sort o' off guard," you may set it down in your notebook that the "latent period" of that batsman is very long and his opponents half consciously perceive it. Unless a player can train down his reaction time—that is to say, shorten it—he will be among the poor batsmen. He will be the more likely to strike out when the pitcher is fresh, deliberate, and with a good assortment of "bingle snuffers."

After you have your pet bat, stainless, knotless, paintless, smooth, sound, and straight grained, have several duplicates at hand in case of accident. The bat should be so balanced in your particular hands that it feels light, solid, and secure. In fine, it ought to give you the confidence of reaching out and pushing the ball exactly where you wish it to drop.

The place hitter, of course, has a larger "meadow," so to speak, but this is more than neutralized by the fact that he must meet an intentionally deceptive oncoming rocket in motion. He must receive, swing at or otherwise as his swift judgment and controlled muscles allow, meet the onrush of the gyrating, gyroscopic, cometlike sphere. One of the early steps which make for good batting is practice, practice, practice, and then more practice. Hit the ball, not [illegible] intelligence, whenever and [illegible] possible. It may be merely a lobbed ball by a smaller boy, or it may be another Christie Mathewson or a Johnson sending "you all he's got."

The point is to discipline the eyes, muscles, and other concerned structures, to practice quick recovery and preparedness for the next ball. Get the bat back, be smooth and unemotional in meeting the ball and do not half finish the swing when you have missed your intended action. Meeting the ball half way means to a batter that he has recognized whether the pitched ball has been a swift one or a slow one and has with judgment allowed the former to bat the bat instead of him wrongly swinging at it and has met the slow ball well in front at the finish of the stroke.

To "choke" a bat a little is to hold it not entirely down at the end of the handle. Individual habits and preferences may decide whether you should keep the hands right at the end or a little way up. It is better, as a general thing, to acquire no peculiarities. Pitchers and others who study different batsmen take advantage of such things at a price to the batter's average. Bats held loosely or with the hands too far apart limit the ability of the batter. The bat is to be best held firmly, with the palms one above the other and in line exactly opposite each other. A bat held loosely makes a hit ball an easy one to catch.

To hit a ball which comes at you like a shot is no easy matter until your eyes and other fibres have practiced equal eagerness to meet it. It is, after all, as in most things, all a question of will to learn, time to practice, and persistentcy to conquer it. A heavy bat, held a little cal execution ranks among the best examples of his later period; and Van Dyck's portrait of Isabella Brant, a group of unnamed family portraits, which are classed as the most finished work of his early period, and a portrait of Philip, Lord Wharton, a Van Dyck masterpiece. The artists of the Dutch and Flemish schools as a whole are remarkably well represented. The acknowledged masterpieces of Teniers the Younger, the "Feast of the Arquebusiers" and the "Guardroom," both belong to the Hermitage.

Probably the most famous of the many Rembrandts at the Hermitage is the so-called "Danae," of which Bode wrote: "Titian himself could not have depicted more truly or with greater charm the softness and delicacy of the warm and palpitating flesh, or the effect of light and shade on the skin. The cool, green curtains, the gilt baroque frame of the gorgeous bedstead with its white linen add to the glowing effect of the nude figure on which the light is poured, and still further enhance the changing play of light and shade and the wonderful charm of the chiaroscuro." Other well-known Rembrandts which long had their home in Petrograd are the "Old Woman with a Book," the portrait of a man who has been called John Sobieski, but is not, and a beautiful "Holy Family."

The large and fine collection of French paintings included Nicholas Poussin's two masterpieces, Italian mountain landscapes, which are almost unrivaled among his works. There were also some exquisite landscapes by Claude Lorrain in the "French rooms" of the Hermitage, and some beautiful things by Greuze, Watteau, and Fragonard. The small collection of British paintings contained some especially fine portraits by Lawrence.

The picture gallery of the Hermitage has had an interesting history of steady acquisition. It was founded, of course, by Peter the Great. In 1763 Catherine II. added the collection of the Prussian patriot Gotzkowski, which consisted of pictures bought for Frederick II. and not accepted by that Prince because of the exigencies of war. Catherine continued to buy paintings, separately and by entire collections; many of the finest Van Dycks in Petrograd were included in the collection of Sir Robert Walpole at Houghton Hall, which the Russian Empress bought in 1799. Catherine also ordered paintings from the masters of her own time. In 1814 Alexander I. bought from the ex-Empress Josephine thirty-eight of the pictures that had been the gems of her collection at Malmaison; the famous "Arquebusiers" of the younger Teniers was among these. Alexander also bought a number of famous pictures from a private collection in Amsterdam, and Nicholas I. followed his example, going to Spain, France, Holland, and Italy for treasures of Western art.

It was Nicholas who, in 1836, bought Raphael's "Alba Madonna" from the Dutch banker, Coesvelt. Alexander II. added the "Madonna Connestabile" to the Hermitage collection of Raphaels. Alexander III. brought to Petrograd seventy-four paintings from the Galitzuin Museum in Moscow, including a triptych by Perugino, and in later years a few other treasures have been added. In 1912 a collection of English portraits was brought to the Hermitage. Last September, in the midst of revolution, a dispatch from Petrograd stated that the art treasures of the Hermitage had been "packed to send away" to an unknown destination.

Second only to the picture gallery as a priceless possession, and indeed in its way unique, is the so-called "Kertch collection" of Greek antiquities. No other museum in the world contains so many small specimens of Greek, especially Attic, work; many of the antiquities, most of which are of gold, date from that most flourishing period of Greek art, the fifth and fourth centuries B. C. The most valuable were found during excavations near Kertch in the Crimea in the years following 1831, and also on the Asiatic side of the Straits of Kertch. There are ornaments, vases, drinking horns, some fragments of ivory and fine pieces of terra cotta work, a few statues, and a sarcophagus of cypress wood. The Hermitage collection of vases is also noteworthy, and there are smaller groups of antique bronzes, silver work, terra cottas, and Scythian and Siberian antiquities. The mediaeval and Renaissance collection, including weapons, glass, majolica, and metal work from all parts of Europe, is very fine. What has happened to these small or fragile things it is impossible to guess.

A smaller museum, containing fine collections of silver and porcelain, was housed in the "First Hermitage of Empress Catherine II.," between the Hermitage and the Winter Palace itself.

Of the Winter Palace and some of its contents, Mr. Winter (in "The Russian Empire of Today") writes: "The Winter Palace was destroyed by fire in 1837; it was rebuilt and furnished on an even more elaborate scale. Many interesting war pictures decorate the walls, and in the Treasury the usual collection of royal jewels is shown. Among these is the Orloff diamond, one of the largest diamonds in Europe. This jewel at one time formed the eye of an idol in India. It was stolen through strategy by a French soldier, and Count Orloff purchased it and presented it to Catherine II. Another memento is the crown of Catherine II., which is said to have cost 1,000,000 rubles, and she is likewise the only Russian woman who ever wore a crown at all." There are a few fine paintings in the Winter Palace.

The Imperial Library of Petrograd was one of the richest and most valuable in Europe, enriched, Mr. Winter points out, with "the spoils of Russian wars in Europe and Asia." Its collection of ancient manuscripts, Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Persian, Arabic, and Slavonic, is unsurpassed.

Many Western art treasures were housed, too, in the Stroganov Palace on the Nevski Prospekt. A Tintoretto portrait and a landscape by Claude Lorrain were the special gems of the picture gallery, but there were also valuable and beautiful paintings by Perugino, Filippino Lippi, Rubens, and Van Dyck, as well as a bust by Donatello. There are a few rare pieces of sculpture in the Hermitage as well.

The Semenov Gallery contained some excellent examples of the Flemish and Dutch schools of painting. Its founder, P. P. Semenov, the explorer, died in 1914, bequeathing his collection to the Hermitage. A small collection of French, Flemish, and Dutch paintings was in the Kushelev Gallery of the Imperial Academy of Arts.

It is a far cry from all these masterpieces of the art of Western Europe, with which Russian Emperors loved to enrich their capital, to the Russian Museum of Petrograd. This is the Museum of Alexander III., the picture gallery of which was devoted to Russian painting, and offered visitors excellent opportunity for the study of the development of painting in Russia. But Russian painting is of recent development. Peter and Catherine II. sought to encourage art in Russia. Catherine especially tried to stimulate the work of native painters. But the Russians who bought pictures in that day bought only foreign masterpieces. The great treasures of older art that enriched Petrograd were treasures of—and for—all of Western Europe.

A Glass of Wine with the Borgias

The youth hesitates, hand on glass. Will he obey the imperious look of command in the eyes of the beautiful Lucrezia—the magnet that has drawn him to this supper in the pontifical apartment? Will he yield to the ingratiating advances of Caesar and partake of the proffered cup? Or will he be warned before it is too late by the sinister glance shot from the cruel eyes of the old Pontiff as he coldly calculates the destruction of the young gallant?

To comply or refuse is equally hazardous. If he decline the poisoned draught, will he escape the knife of the hired assassin even now lurking in the shadows of the Papal Palace.

Rodrigo Borgia (Alexander VI), Lucrezia and Caesar formed the diabolical trinity which sat for eleven years upon the papal throne in Rome, an impious parody of the Holy Trinity—the most perfect incarnation of evil that ever existed on earth. How many gallant lives thus darkly and without commotion passed out of sight, whirled away by the headlong torrent of the ambition of that terrible triumvirate, is told as only that great weaver of word pictures, Alexandre Dumas, could tell it in his

THE CELEBRATED CRIMES OF HISTORY

NEVER BEFORE TRANSLATED

The millions of English readers and admirers of the works of Alexandre Dumas will hail with keen delight this, the first and absolutely the only complete and unexpurgated translation of Dumas' LES CRIMES CELEBRES, now for the first time available at a price within the reach of all readers. Printed from the same plates as the edition sold by the publishers at $125.00 a set, which was eagerly snapped up by wealthy connoisseurs, the small edition it is our privilege to offer our patrons has all the unusual features so much appreciated by lovers of books as works of art. The eight volumes are beautifully bound in cloth, stamped with emblematic design, with monogram in gold field.

Nothing in the Whole World Like Them

"Great crimes have played so large a part in the world's history that one cannot obtain a thorough knowledge of past times without the aid of such a book as this."—Says THE NEW YORK HERALD, recently reviewing THE CELEBRATED CRIMES OF HISTORY. The lover of History is enraptured with the wealth of facts, from new authorities, brought to bear by Dumas upon the life of the charming and beautiful, but indiscreet and ill-fated, Mary Stuart as Queen of France and Scotland. Read the story of her amours, and of her barbarous imprisonment and murderous execution. There is no other work like this. None of the editions of Dumas contain these stories; and no set of Dumas is complete without them.

A Debauched Court

Brilliantly worked into a vivid picture of the Dark Ages are the vices and crimes of that extraordinary family, the Borgias, that furnished one Pope of Rome and some of the blackest pages in history.

Here we see the whole murderous, poisonous crew with their greedy craving for debauchery, flattery, lilies and gold. We watch the career of the beautiful and depraved Lucrezia, who, with the head of a Madonna of Raphael, had the heart of a Messalina beneath her demure exterior. We see the intrigues of the mediaeval papal court—the murders, abductions, poisonings—drawn from the chronicles of eye-witnesses, those naive accounts which, without embarrassment, call a spade a spade.

Dumas' Masterpiece

THE CELEBRATED CRIMES OF HISTORY is considered by many in France as Dumas' masterpiece. The highest praise has been bestowed on it by Andrew Lang, Robert Louis Stevenson, and other competent judges.

Think of a fascinating new historical series by Dumas of which only the highly privileged few among English readers heretofore had any knowledge! And all yours at a really nominal price!

"Ancient Commerce," a Mural Painting in Course of Progress for the Commercial High School in Brooklyn, N. Y., by A. J. Bogdanove.

ALBERT ANDRE'S paintings are now on exhibition at the Durand-Ruel galleries, and disclose a sturdy talent with a minimum of the characteristics commonly designated as Gallic, although the sound observation, the discreet expression, and the balance and breadth marking the work as a whole are attributes of the French character as it appears in its serious undertakings. In fact, to the French artist the smallest occasion for exercising his technical facility is a serious occasion. That is why the light and dainty ornament of the eighteenth century is eloquent of the dedication of the workman to his task. That is why a French cook can make his omelet a masterpiece. It is the intense seriousness of the Frenchman confronted by a technical problem that gives him his remarkable command of his medium and of his tools.

In the case of Albert André one notes a certain simplicity and weight in the processes of his mind adequately supporting the less uncommon technical skill. His "Femme à la Violette," for example, conveys an impression of gravity, although the subject is one usually treated with more or less lightness and casualness. A girl in a red coat and dark hat and scarf is adjusting her veil. Her gesture is perfectly natural, her attractive face wears an expression of complete absorption in the trivial act; but the massing of the color and the fine dignity of the design give the effect of a large style and a thoughtful normal temper of mind.

The "Femme à la Promenade" is painted in a somewhat gayer mood. A young woman is starting out for a walk with her dog, whose exuberant cheer is reflected in her pleasant features and buoyant carriage. The enlivening beauty of the day is apparent in the light and the tone. There are compositions in which curves as flat and broad as that of the Norman arch are balanced by the strong rectangular shapes of window panes and doorways.

The pictures of Renoir in his southern studio are warm with sunlight and color, and here and there one catches a glimpse of shimmering reds and yellows that hint at the influence of the old painter upon his younger friend, but they are rare. Although André has sought Renoir with love and admiration in his heart and skill in his finger tips, he has remained his own master and kept his head under conditions that would have turned a weaker man into an imitator. Now at 48, with three years' army service behind him, he stands firmly in his place among the important painters of contemporary France.

A Group Exhibition.

At the Folsom Galleries Paul Cornoyer, E. Irving Couse, and George M. Bruestle are showing their pictures totogether. Mr. Bruestle's energetic touch and cool, strong color make a salient impression. Nature never nods for him, she is always effervescent, always somewhat chill and stern in spite of the liveliness of her mood, and always tonic rather than soothing. Mr. Cornoyer, on the other hand, sees with a placid vision and his three canvases are filled with the serenity of quiet contemplation. The Indian subjects by Mr. Couse are in his usual manner, with a somewhat excessive emphasis on picturesque detail.

Mural Paintings for Commercial High School.

The young Russian painter, A. J. Bogdanove, who won the competition for two mural decorations for the Commercial High School in Brooklyn, N. Y., by A. J. Bogdanove. docks and identify the principal features of the scene. The panel representing ancient commerce shows a Mediterranean port, with merchants selling rugs and other incidents illustrating the older methods.

The work is still unfinished and the young painter is in the first class of the drafted men, but he is hoping to leave a complete decoration behind him. He has laid in his preliminary painting on broad lines with a fine appreciation of the fundamentals of design. His linear pattern carries out the large curve of the proscenium arch, and the figures and ships contribute to a series of rhythmic curves that suggest the motion of incoming waves. The inner modeling and anatomical framework have been somewhat lost in the first application of the paint, but the preliminary sketches show a definite understanding of the more important problems involved.

Paintings by Everett L. Bryant.

Everett L. Bryant is showing nearly fifty paintings at the Arlington Galleries, brilliant and gay improvisations upon classic and antique themes, such as "Perseus and Andromeda," "Romulus and Remus," "Europa," "Egyptian Repast," with flower studies and landscapes and little nude figures, varying greatly in technical merit but each with its own bright charm.

The artist's color is remarkably pure and distinguished. He uses a certain blonde blue with a sallow yellow and silvery white that unite in a harmony of great refinement. The Egyptian themes have perhaps more of sensibility than of style, but the girl in a boat surrounded by swans and clumps of lotus bloom has a fresh human quality not often found in modern versions of the antique world.

Three small nudes, painted about ten years ago, are rather more direct than the later work, and two of them at least have a flowerlike beauty of color, fair girls among blue and rose draperies, the rose deepening to a stronger note in the flushed faces. In the "Europa," which hung in the Pennsylvania Academy exhibition of a year or two ago, the type of Greek womanhood is well suggested in the beautiful young creature clinging to the back of the bull, a robust splendor of physique, muscular and compact, and yet with tender and sensitive contours that pulse with life.

Landscapes by Three Artists.

The Macbeth Galleries are holding an exhibition of the works of three landscape painters, Charles H. Davis, Ben Foster, and Willard Metcalf. It would be difficult to find three men of more diverse vision or methods of expression, but they assemble in a remarkably harmonious grouping. The cool gray tone and slightly austere sentiment in the pictures by Mr. Davis are characteristic of his interesting talent. The craggy forms of his trees, his cold shadows, and his deep disturbed skies unite in an emotional effect curiously contrasted with the objective temper of his companions. Mr. Foster shows a number of landscapes closely observed and literally translated, and with these he has a study of flowers in a pottery vase, beautiful in the strong simplicity and candor of the painting. Mr. Metcalf's contribution is a daintier realism, the crinkling laughter of foliage stirred by light breezes. His streams wrinkle into innumerable wavelets and eddies, his undergrowth is the finest tangle of slim stems, his sky is sweet with Summer. It is an ingratiating art that always can be counted upon to suggest pleasant associations. The exhibition lasts until April 18.

The San Francisco Art Association will hold its annual exhibition from March 24 to May 22. There is a prize of $100 for the best figure painting, and there is the Emanuel Walter Prize of $300 for the best painting in competition in the exhibition, the winning picture to become the property of the Emanuel Walker collection. The ninth annual convention of the American Federation of Arts will be held in Detroit, Mich., on May 23 and 24, 1918.

The Arts and Crafts Society Building, 25 Watson Street, will be headquarters, and three of the four sessions will be held in its unique little theatre which is under the same roof as the exhibition and salesrooms and admirably designed to serve not only as a theatre but as an auditorium and meeting place. One session, that on the afternoon of the first day, will be held in the auditorium of the Detroit Art Museum, where at that time there will be in progress a comprehensive exhibition of contemporary American paintings, and where may also be seen an extremely interesting and excellent collection of American handicrafts assembled and owned by George G. Booth. The program of the convention is planned on constructive lines with discussion of timely topics, the relation of art to industry, the training of designers, the establishment of the small manufactory, the housing problem, and war monuments among them.

Portraits of the Great Chalice of Aatioch.

Kouchakji Frères are exhibiting a series of etchings by Mrs. Margareth West Kinney made from the heads on the Great Chalice of Antioch, exhibited by the same firm a year or so ago. It will be remembered that this chalice was assigned to the middle of the first century A. D. and consisted of an inner and an outer cup, the latter covered with carved ornamentation in open work with twelve small figures arranged in two horizontal rows. The figure of Christ and that of Peter were promptly identified, but the other ten figures were more difficult to place. The group now is considered to represent the saints Peter, Paul, James, Thaddaeus, Andrew, Luke, Mark, Matthew, John, and his brother James, with Christ represented twice, once as a child of about 12 years, and again at the moment of His resurrection. The time of the carving is supposed to be about twenty or twenty-five years after the death of Christ, and the artist is assumed to be one who had known the originals of the portraits in life. The figures are only about three-eighths of an inch high, but the character revealed in them is positive and the execution is bold and free. The task of interpreting the spirit of the heads was arduous.

The American Art Annual.

In the introduction to the current issue of The American Art Annual, Florence N. Levy calls attention to the outbreak of war posters immediately following our entry into the war and adds:

"When future historians write about the great war they will turn to the posters of various countries and look upon them as 'documents' revealing the point of view of each nation, their culture, artistic ability, &c. Will we be proud of the posters printed by the millions for distribution in the United States? It is an open question. Here and there an artist of experience has done his 'bit' by producing the design for a poster which stands out as an exception among many mediocre or bad designs. In this group of good posters belong the 'Three Sisters' made by Edwin H. Blashfield at the time of the visit to this country of Marshal Joffre, the Navy League poster painted by Robert Reid on a large billboard space in Chicago, the Maxfield Parrish design widely used in San Francisco, and the recruiting poster by Albert Sterner, 'Over There,' which was displayed in New York City and which forms the frontispiece to this volume of The Art Annual."

The multiplicity of uses to which art has been put in the present emergency is noted. "Never since the Middle Ages," Miss Levy comments, "when the Church taught its lessons by means of pictures to people who could not read the written word, has art been called upon to serve in so many ways. The National Committee on Public Information has found it necessary to have a Division of Pictorial Publicity, with headquarters at 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City, of which Charles Dana Gibson is Chairman. The Camouflage Corps, under the direction of the Division of Engineers at Washington, has attracted many artists. Even the Medical Department requires artists.

"Throughout the country the artists are doing a full share of war work. Perhaps the museum which has been most active in this direction is that at Toledo, Ohio, where a great number of patriotic meetings have been held, including a War Garden Show. The Toledo Museum has also placed a building on its grounds at the disposal of the Red Cross and of the Woman's Patriotic League.

"The severance of trade relations with Germany has thrown the United States upon its own resources, and for the development of industrial art this has been a real service. The year 1917 has seen greater advancement along industrial art lines than at any other time in the history of this country."

A French Decoration.

The French Government has bestowed upon Albert Roullier of Chicago for his services to art in America the decoration of "Officier de l'Instruction Publique." This is said to be the only civil decoration given to any one by France since the war began.

A Tribute to Henry Golden Dearth.

Art Editor, New York Times:

With your permission, I should like to contribute a few words in memory of Henry Golden Dearth, whose recent death represents a loss of incalculable measure to the art world of this country. It would be impossible for any one who had possessed the rare privilege of knowing Mr. Dearth intimately to refrain from eulogizing his personal characteristics. But the significance of his death transcends a merely personal significance; in losing him we lose an influence untiring in its efforts to inculcate the highest and cleanest ideals, and an example of perseverance and nobility of standard and point of view that amounted to a veritable radiance. Mr. Dearth's art was a beautiful and, in certain of its manifestations, a unique thing. It is possible that his color sense was unrivaled in the art of this country. Personally, I believe that in his marines he achieved work that placed him among the half dozen finest painters of his generation.

But it is not of this phase of the man that I would speak. Time will bountifully reward his artistic efforts. I would emphasize the supreme beauty of the man's unselfishness and idealism. Mr. Dearth expended more energy upon an advertising of the merits of others than he expended upon a furthering of his own interests. He was the adviser of a number of important collectors, and his decisions represented a sheer abstract idealism. He was a consistent and redouhtable assailant of adulterations of taste and of intention. He fought clean and hard for beauty. I may say that I have never known a man more devoted to impersonal integrities. Even when he felt himself menaced by a mortal illness he retained and exercised the full measure of his enthusiasms.

Mr. Dearth's life as an artist was lived apart from facile adultations and press agentings. He saw others receiving misplaced rewards, but I cannot recall a word of complaint or disparagement that ever fell from his lips. He gave royally, copiously, unstintingly of the spirit.

How pure these flakes must be

Things you never dreamed could be laundered

A few years ago, how you dreaded to trust your delicate things to soap and water!

Today, who thinks of sending Georgettes to the cleaner's? or precious laces? or the most expensive sweaters? or delicate hangings? There's a better way, quicker, much less expensive.

You cleanse these things yourself—keep them like new with Lux, the modern form of soap. Things you never dreamed could be laundered, you now trust unhesitatingly to the pure, delicate flakes which whisk up into the richest lather and cleanse without rubbing.

Without the purity of Lux, delicate and unusual things could not be trusted to even this new way of washing.

If water alone won't hurt a fabric, then Lux won't.

Delicate colors come from the Lux suds as fresh as when new. If the water alone does not cause the color to "run," Lux won't injure it one degree.

Try Lux yourself. You will be delighted. Your grocer, druggist or department store has Lux. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

HONOR FLAG
THIRD LIBERTY LOAN
AWARDED BY THE UNITED STATES TREASURY DEPARTMENT TO EVERY TOWN SUBSCRIBING ITS QUOTA

The Honor Flag of the Third Liberty Loan is awarded by the United States Treasury Department to every town in the country which sells its quota of Liberty bonds in the present campaign. Every town which wins the right to fly this Flag will have its name inscribed on the State Honor Roll under a State Honor flag to be unfurled at the State capital. The results in each state will be indicated on a national Honor Flag which will be raised in the Treasury Department in Washington and remain there permanently.

When you buy a Third Liberty Loan bond you will receive a window emblem bearing your name and a reproduction of the Honor Flag. Paste the emblem in a window of your home or place of business.

What Are Bonds of the Third Liberty Loan?

They are an investment in the United States of America. They are a direct promise to pay back with interest the money that you invest.

This promise of the United States is the safest investment on earth.

The difference between $100 tucked away in your home and $100 invested in Third Liberty Loan bonds is that if you keep the $100 in cash, at the end of the year $100 is all you have, but if you buy a $100 bond of the Third Liberty Loan, at the end of the year you have the $100 bond and the interest.

Why You Should Buy Liberty Bonds

Because our sons and our neighbors' sons are making our fight abroad. Victory depends largely on whether they are supplied with sufficient guns, ammunition and other necessaries to win, and their condition upon returning depends upon the care which is taken of them in and behind the lines. It is up to us to supply money for the sinews of war and every comfort that can be given our fighting men. They offer their lives for us and our country. We are asked only to lend our money to our government. Could we do less and remain true to ourselves, our country and our flag?

Vanity Fair
UNDERSILKS

THE tight skirt holds no terror for us now that we have our Vanity Fair Pettibockers! The days of struggling with winding, binding silk petticoats are over! The Pettibocker is all that its name implies—a petticoat in frilly appearance—a knickerbocker in comfortable reality.

The Pettibocker in all its bifurcated glory dawned upon the world of fashion a few months ago, and it seems as though we'd never worn anything else.

We could resign ourselves to going wheatless, meatless, heatless and even eatless, but "Pettibockerless"—Never! Fortunately, it's a sacrifice we won't be called upon to make. The Pettibocker is so patriotic that it seems especially designed for war workers! It emancipates woman more than the ballot itself!

In all the street colors—navy, emerald, Belgian blue, taupe, black, sand, khaki, beet-root—and in pink and white for evening wear.

"Um-m-m-m!"

NO WONDER it's so juicy-jammy and sweet!—It's made from fruit picked from a Hicks Fruit-tree.—And we say with all the experience and prestige gained from sixty years of service to home gardeners, that the fruit you will pick from the Hicks Trees in your back or front yard will be fresher, juicier, sweeter and more luscious—tastier in every way—than the market fruit you buy! To say nothing of the saving in money and the fun of growing your own!

Flower, vegetable and fruit gardening can be combined on the smallest suburban lot—our new book, "Home Landscapes," free on request, will show you how. To prove that a small outlay will go a great ways in fruit-gardening, here's a special $5 offer: 2 Apple Trees, 1 Pear, 1 Plum, 5 Grape Vines, 25 Raspberries, 5 Rhubarb, 5 Currants—all for $5.00, if you act soon, and mention The Times! Send for the free book, anyway, to-day.

New Way to Wash Your Face Improves Poor Complexions

Beauty-specialists agree that the secret of a perfect complexion is a thoroughly clean skin. But all toilet soap contains caustic potash or caustic soda to dry and age the skin, encouraging the premature aging of the complexion. The same thing in soap that shrinks woolens also shrivels the skin. In place of soap many use cold cream. Many face creams contain mineral oil, and mineral oil helps to grow hair. A specialist has perfected a new substance, called ara-mara, which is not only excellent for washing the face, but it cannot injure the most delicate complexion. All you do is to gently massage it into the skin and wash with plain warm water. It not only cleanses thoroughly, but it lightens the complexion much better than lemon juice or face bleach. It is surprising to see how fresh, clear and wholesome the skin becomes, even after only one proper treatment. Many of those who use it declare it has done more real good to their complexions than any cream or toilet soap they ever used. It's a wonderful treatment for enlarged, clogged pores and irritations. It certainly is a great blessing to those who have dull, sallow, lifeless complexions. You can always get ara-mara at Liggett's and Macy's. If you live out of town and your home dealer has not got it, you can order fifty cents' worth of ara-mara by mail of Herbert Roystone, 16 East 18th Street, New York.

Your skin is changing every day

How to make it as attractive as you would love to have it

Your skin, like the rest of your body, is continually changing. Every day, as old skin dies, new forms in its place. This is your opportunity to make this new skin as clear, radiant and fresh looking as you have always wanted it.

See what the following treatment will do for your skin.

Lather your wash cloth well with warm water and Woodbury's Facial Soap. Apply it to your face and distribute the lather thoroughly. Now with the tips of your fingers work this cleansing, antiseptic lather into your skin, always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse first with warm water, then with cold—the colder the better. Finish by rubbing your face for thirty seconds with a piece of ice. Always be careful to dry the skin thoroughly.

This treatment cleanses the skin and brings the blood to the surface, stimulating the small muscular fibres. Use it persistently, once a week, and before long your skin will begin to take on that greater loveliness which the daily use of Woodbury's always brings. The other six nights be sure to keep your skin thoroughly cleansed with Woodbury's Facial Soap.

You will find a 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment and for general cleansing use for this time. Get a cake today. Woodbury's is for sale at drug stores and toilet goods counters everywhere throughout the United States and Canada.

Write today for a trial size cake

For 5c we will send you a cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap large enough for a week of this treatment, together with a twenty-page booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch," which gives you the proper treatment for all the commoner skin troubles. For 12c we will send the treatment booklet, the trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap and samples of Woodbury's Facial Cream and Facial Powder. Write today.

Science has found a way to help you hear clearly and distinctly. The Wonderful doubles the joy of living. Look at it and you SEE the simplest and smallest hearing device in the world; use it and you realize you have a remarkable aid to the deaf.

Charles McCausland

Little Gem Ear Phone

Charles McCausland, 207 Dickerson Street, Newark, N. J., has been deaf since four years of age. Due to this affliction, he was seriously handicapped in business until he heard of and purchased a Little Gem Ear Phone. He has used it continuously with excellent results, has established himself well up in the business world, hearing everything distinctly (in theatres, lecture rooms, telephone, etc.,) and credits all his success and enjoyment to the marvelous Little Gem. He will cheerfully answer any inquiries.

The absolute superiority of the Little Gem was recognized at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, where it received the Gold Medal, highest award for ear 'phones in competition with the world.

ORDER HIGH SPEED IN BOND CAMPAIGN; TO AROUSE CITY

Intensive Efforts from This Time On to Raise New York's Quota.

25,000 TO MARCH TONIGHT

Parade of 19 Military Units Arranged to Spur Subscriptions to the Issue.

APPEAL BY GEN. PERSHING

Asks for Heavy Bond Buying as an Expression of Confidence in Army Overseas.

Under the stimulus of the very encouraging results obtained on Saturday—the opening day of the four week's campaign for the $3,000,000,000 Liberty Loan—the work of soliciting subscriptions will be pursued vigorously today and the expectations are that applications, large in volume and amount, will be filed at the various banks and trust companies.

Under the arrangements made by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, every bank in the district, which takes in all of New York State, twelve northern counties of New Jersey and Fairfield County, Conn., is expected to send in a daily report of the total of subscriptions received.

The Bond Division of the bank on Saturday, a half-holiday, listed subscriptions totaling $74,000,000, and obviously this included only reports of those New York City institutions which forwarded them by messenger. The bank this morning will receive reports from all of the out-of-town banks and local banks which are mailing the daily advices. When these are tabulated, it is expected that Saturday's total will be greatly in excess of $74,000,000. It was estimated on Saturday night that the first day's subscriptions were in the neighborhood of $100,000,000, that figure including subscriptions locally announced but not officially forwarded to the Reserve Bank.

Although a great deal of preliminary work has already been done, the educational or publicity phase of the Loan Committee's activities from now on will be conducted on a more intensive scale. Bond booths will be opened in stores, hotels, public parks, railroad stations, and other places. More signs and posters are to be displayed, and patriotic appeals will be made through the medium of speeches and parades. Airplane flights will form one of the chief features of the work of calling the public's attention to the need of subscriptions.

Many Meetings Arranged.

James M. Beck, formerly Assistant Attorney General of the United States, will speak at 3:30 o'clock today at the New York Stock Exchange. At the noonday meeting on the steps of the Sub-Treasury in Wall Street Douglas Fairbanks and Charlie Chaplin will make addresses. Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey will open at noon today the Toy Theatre, which has been built on the steps of the Public Library under the direction of the Stage Women's War Relief Committee. The Girl Scouts will conduct exercises at the Plaza Circle at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

Lyttleton Fox will preside at the Liberty Bell Booth in City Hall, which is being conducted under the auspices of the Mayor's Committee of Women on National Defense, where $50,000 of bonds were sold on Saturday. Among the other speakers will be Frank Tinney, the comedian, Joseph P. Day, the auctioneer, William A. Brady and Ethel Barrymore. Mrs. Guy Wilkinson has charge of the booth. She will be assisted by Mrs. George F. Baker, Jr.; Mrs. Finley Peter Dunne, Mrs. Phoenix Ingraham, Mrs. Joseph Earle Stevens, Mrs. Price Post, Miss Maud Sterner, Miss Webb and Mrs. Briggs.

25,000 Men Will Parade.

At eight o'clock this evening, 19 military organizations will leave their armories, and accompanied by military bands, will march up and down the streets of New York. It is estimated that approximately 25,000 men will be in line. Arrangements for the parade were made with Adj. Gen. Charles H. Sherrill, who last night issued orders to the commanders of the various units.

The organizations whose parade routes had been determined upon up to last night, are:

The 69th Regiment from Twenty-fifth Street and Lexington Avenue, on Twenty-fifth Street to Fifth Avenue; to Washington Place; to Broadway; to Broome Street; to the Bowery; to Houston Street; to Second Avenue, where it will meet the 6th Coast Artillery Corps, which will start from Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth Street and march along Fourteenth Street to Second Avenue.

The 71st Infantry from Thirty-fourth Street and Park Avenue to Second Avenue; to Twenty-third Street; to Fourth Avenue; to Union Square, where a rally will be held.

One Supergun Shelling Paris Has Burst; Rausenberger, Inventor, Fired First Shots

PARIS, April 7.—The bombardment of the Paris district by the long-range German gun continued today. There were no casualties.

The report that one of these guns exploded is confirmed from absolutely reliable sources. This occurred on March 23, a Lieutenant and nine men being killed.

Started Shelling of Paris.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, April 7.—The Frankfurter Zeitung reports that Professor Rausenberger, inventor of the latest big gun and who also built the 42-centimeter mortar, assisted personally at the firing of the first shots on Paris.

Professor Fritz Rausenberger, manager of the Krupp works and builder of the famous 42-centimeter gun, in an interview printed in the Berliner Tageblatt in February of 1916, declared that artillery so large and powerful that it would be possible to bombard England from the Continent would be the certain product of the near future. The co-director of the Krupp works declared the day of flat trajectory pieces was past, and that mortars and vertical shooting artillery would be in increasing demand. This, he said, was because the nature of modern warfare had almost done away with the necessity of shooting horizontally, it being possible to reach horizontal trench lines only by shots from cannon shooting vertically. Modern artillery, notwithstanding its tremendous strides, the Professor said, had in nowise reached the limits of its possibilities either in effectiveness or in carrying power. The cannon of the future, he believed, would be able to penetrate the strongest fortified shelters and nullify "England's shimmering ocean armament, the old proud wall which for centuries has protected it from the Continent."

Supergun Shock Felt Here.

BUFFALO, April 7.—Professor John A. Curtin, who has had charge of the seismograph at Canisius College in this city for years, declared tonight that the shocks of the explosion of the long-range German gun with which Paris is being bombarded have been recorded on seismographs all over the country. The shock, he explained, causes the needle to record a small dot on the smoked paper on the cylinder of the earthquake detector.

Since Palm Sunday, Professor Curtin says, instruments all over this country have been showing these dots, and the opinion now is that they are caused by the German cannon. Mine explosions often are recorded when within 100 miles of a seismograph.

These marks are different from earthquake lines, while the marks believed to be due to the cannon explosions are similar to earthquake marks, though much less distinct. Professor Curtin said he thought the cannon was securely bedded on concrete which rested on rock strata.

RUSSIANS CHARGE JAPAN IS INVADING

Declare Talk of Protecting Life and Property at Vladivostok Is a Pretext.

LANDING THERE IS OPPOSED

Bolsheviki Demand to Know How Allies Stand—Will Determine Russia's Policy.

MOSCOW, April 6, (Associated Press.)—Admiral Kato, Japanese Minister of Marine, has issued a proclamation at Vladivostok dealing with the landing there on Friday of Entente allied forces. The Japanese Minister says he feels great sympathy with Russia in the present situation, wishes a cessation of fratricide and the fullest realization of the revolution, but was compelled to take steps to protect life and property of Japanese and allied subjects in view of the murder of a Japanese soldier, and because there were no local organizations at the Siberian port able to maintain law and order. The Admiral adds that he has asked his Government for further instructions.

President Soukhanoff of the Vladivostok Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates, reporting to the Council of National Commissaries, states that in his opinion the killing of the Japanese was a political murder, as no robbery was committed. Efforts to apprehend the criminals have been unsuccessful. M. Soukhanoff adds that the landing of Japanese troops was effected in the presence of the Japanese Consul and Admiral Kato. It was made without the consent of the American and British and other consuls, and no warning was given to the local authorities. Later, British forces were also landed.

The Council of Soldiers' and Workmen's Delegates protested to the Consular Corps. The American and British Consuls consented to receive the delegation as representatives of the Soldiers' and Workmen's Council. The Japanese Consul would deal with them only as private persons, and the French Consul refused to see them at all.

President Soukhanoff reports that the Japanese section of the city is being patrolled by Japanese detachments composed of three to ten men each. Tents are being erected at the end of the Chinese street and also in the churchyard of the Japanese church.

The Council of National Commissaries today issued a statement saying:

"Japan has started a campaign against the Soviet Republic." It then points out that the landing of troops at Vladivostok was effected immediately after the murder of the Japanese without waiting for an investigation to be made, and says the crime was part of a prearranged plan. Continuing, the statement says:

"What is the program of action of the other Governments of the Entente—American, England, France and Italy? Up to the present moment their policy regarding the rapacious scheme of Japan evidently has been one of hesitation.

"The American Government apparently was against the Japanese invasion, but now the situation cannot remain indefinite any longer. England has followed Japan's example. This must be put to the British Government with all emphasis. A similar course must be pursued toward the diplomatic representatives of the United States and other Entente powers."

The statement says the action of the Entente will play a great part in determining the immediate international policy of the Soviet Government.

AUSTRIA SOUGHT BRITISH PARLEY

Smuts Met Count Mensdorff in Switzerland at Vienna's Request.

HAD 3-MINUTE INTERVIEW

Brusquely Ended Colloquy When Teuton Evaded the Question of Separate Peace.

PARIS, April 7.—General Smuts, South African delegate in London for the British Cabinet, was, according to Le Matin, the "figure high in the councils of the Entente Allies" referred to by Premier Clemenceau in his statement of April 5 denying the assertion of Count Czernin that the French Prime Minister had sought to open peace negotiations with Austria-Hungary. The representative of the Dual Monarchy who met General Smuts in Switzerland was Count Mensdorff-Pouilly-Dietrichstein, Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at London when the war broke out.

Immediately upon being introduced to Count Mensdorff, says the newspaper in relating the interview, General Smuts, taking the initiative in the conversation, bluntly said:

"Is it true that you wish to make a separate peace?"

This direct query was too much for the trained diplomat and the Count began a long, evasive reply.

"Yes or no?" reiterated the British representative.

Obtaining no direct reply General Smuts said:

"Then—good night!"

The interview lasted barely three minutes. Vienna was shocked, Le Matin says, at the boorish manner of the "old Transvaal warrior."

Alexander Ribot, who was Premier from March until September, 1917, refused today to make any statement concerning the incident, saying:

"The present Government is perfectly competent to give such explanations as are deemed necessary."

Premier Clemenceau in the course of his statement, in answer to Count Czernin's charge said:

"It would be too easy to recall to what extent Austria has importuned Rome, Washington and London with solicitations for an alleged separate peace, which had no other aim than to slip upon us the yoke which she professes to find to her taste. Who does not know the story of a recent meeting (in Switzerland, of course) of a former Austrian Ambassador and a figure high in the councils of the Entente Allies? The conference lasted only a few minutes. Here again it was not our ally who sought the interview. It was the Austrian Government."

ARMAND SOUGHT INFORMATION

Had No Political Authority in Parley with Austrian.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 7.—Inquiries made by THE NEW YORK TIMES today in official quarters here confirm how amply justified the French Government has been in issuing a formal denial of the statements of Count Czernin as to the so-called "negotiations" between France and Austria for a separate peace.

Quite apart from the fact that, diametrically contrary to Czernin's assertions, whatever interviews took place were entirely on Austria's initiative and not on that of France, the affair, so far as the French end is concerned, was a question of the French service of infor-

BERLIN DECLARES WILSON POINTS OUT GERMANY'S PERIL

"Force to Utmost" Shows What Teuton Defeat Would Mean, Is Semi-Official Comment.

HAILED AS WAR LOAN PLEA

Appeal to Germans to Rejoin by Subscribing to Their Own New Loan.

FRENCH INSPIRED BY SPEECH

President's Words Hailed in Paris as Omen of America's Full War Weight.

Will Exert Our Whole Force, Wilson Assures King George

LONDON, April 7.—Replying to greetings on the occasion of the anniversary of the entry of the United States into the war President Wilson has telegraphed the following message to King George:

"Permit me to express my warm gratification. Your generous message has been received, and I assure you it is with the greatest satisfaction that the people of the United States find themselves side by side in this final war for free self-government with such steadfast and indomitable associates.

"Permit me also to assure your Majesty that we shall continue to do everything possible to put the whole force of the United States into this great struggle."

AMSTERDAM, April 7.—A semi-official statement was issued in Berlin today commenting on the speech made by President Wilson at Baltimore on Saturday night. It says:

"President Wilson turns the historical events upside down. The world knows that the gigantic struggle now being fought in the west is a consequence of the will of the Entente for war.

"President Wilson now calls for force to the utmost, and, in so doing, at last clearly describes the policy of the Americans and their allies; namely, force against everything that opposes them. Germany will not suffer from this yoke of force.

"Mr. Wilson's speech is a propaganda speech for the new American war loan. It is the best possible propaganda for our own loan, since it shows what it would mean for Germany to lose the war."

French Hail Wilson's Firmness.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, April 7.—Each time President Wilson speaks allied Europe seeks new and stronger terms in which to express its approval. Comment today is warmly commendatory of his Baltimore address.

"President Wilson grasps the common thought of all the Allies and makes it crystal clear," said a Frenchman. "If there is a God-fearing element in Germany, the President gives it something to build on, and yet he makes us see more clearly that the Allies must fight sternly on.

"The President has become the recognized spokesman of the Allies, and we in Europe confidently follow such inspiring leadership."

The lofty tone of the speech exactly accords with the fine mental outlook with which the French have regarded the present war from the outset. The French have always looked upon President Wilson as a man with the soul of an apostle, and after his Baltimore speech they are convinced that he is a man of courageous mind and resolute will who has not hesitated to transform words into impressive acts.

This morning's papers are full of enthusiastic appreciations of Mr. Wilson and, to quote one would be to quote all. One of the most interesting, perhaps, is in an article by Alfred Capus in the Figaro, who traces the evolution of the presidential conscience in regard to the war.

"The President of the United States," says Capus, "has come only by degrees to this stern conception which France, plunged into carnage and the victim of unheard of atrocities, adopted immediately the war began. At one time Wilson even dreamed of a repentant Germany and of a vast human society in which even the Germany of William II., Hindenburg, and Ludendorff would take a place.

"I believe that Wilson suffered much in having to relinquish this illusion, but the reality of the situation soon made itself felt on this superior and healthy mind. Germany revealed herself to him in her true character as a monstrous nation which exists only by devouring others."

Sees Hastening of Just Peace.

The Temps this evening expresses the opinion that, of all the speeches which President Wilson has hitherto made, that of yesterday is probably the best calculated to hasten the just peace which he wishes.

"After a year of war," says The Temps, "the President of the United States is tired of discussion with the puppets who compose the German Gov-

Kaiser Again at Front, Confers with Hindenburg

LONDON, April 7.—Emperor William returned to the Western front on Saturday and conferred with Field Marshal von Hindenburg and General Ludendorff, a dispatch from Berlin forwarded by the Copenhagen correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company says. It is believed the Emperor intends traveling to Rumania in a few days.

Dr. Richard von Kuehlmann, the German Secretary of Foreign Affairs, returned to the German capital on Saturday from Karlsruhe, where he had a long conversation with Emperor William, particularly regarding Rumanian peace conditions.

BERLIN, April 7, (via London.)—"On the southern bank of the Oise the continuation of our attack brought fresh successes," says the official communication from Army Headquarters this evening. "Pierremande and Folembray have been taken."

The day official communication from the front reads:

On the battlefront violent artillery duels developed in the afternoon, followed by strong British and French attacks on the Ancre and the Avre. The British forces, storming in thick masses, collapsed north of Beaumont-Hamel and before our bridgehead positions near Albert.

South of Villers-Bretonneux an action by enemy storming troops which had assembled did not develop on account of our fire.

French divisions which had been brought up from other fronts stormed in vain on the western bank of the Avre, between Castel and Mailly, east of Thory, near Cantigny, and five times near Mesnil. With the heaviest losses their attacks broke down many times after desperate hand-to-hand fighting.

The troops of the army of General Boehlu attacked yesterday morning enemy positions on the southern bank of the Oise, near Amigny. While some of them forced a passage over the broad and very marshy Oise sector and took by storm the suburbs of Chauny, other troops in an attack from the east took strong enemy positions near Amigny and in the northeastern portion of Couey Wood. They reached the line of Bichancourt, Autreville, and the northern border of Barisis.

As a result of the overpowering fire of our artillery and mine throwers, the French suffered very sanguinary losses. To the present over 1,400 prisoners have been brought in.

By way of reprisal for the continuous bombardment of our dugouts in Laon the bombardment of Rheims was continued.

On the eastern bank of the Meuse a reconnoitring thrust near Beaumont yielded 70 prisoners and 10 machine guns.

In aerial battles 18 enemy airplanes were shot down yesterday.

Folembray is on the southern edge of the Forest of Couey and about two miles south of Barisis, the village in the wood which the Germans reached in the fighting southeast of Chauny on Saturday. Pierremande is on the western edge of the wood, at about the same distance from Barisis.

Austria Wants No Red Envoy Yet.

VIENNA, April 6, (via London.)—Count Czernin, the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, replying to a message of the People's Commissariat at Moscow regarding the appointment of Leo Kameneff, a member of the Russian peace delegation, as Ambassador to Austria, said that he desired to point out that according to Article 10 of the peace treaty "diplomatic and consular relations are to be resumed only after the ratification of the peace treaty and that only then will the moment have arrived for the selection of mutual representatives."

Lloyd George Appeals to India to Resist German Plan to Establish Tyranny Over Asia as Well as Europe

LONDON, April 7.—In a telegram to the Viceroy of India appealing to the Government and the people to redouble their efforts to resist the intention, now transparently clear, of the rulers of Germany to establish tyranny over Asia, as well as Europe, David Lloyd George, the British Prime Minister, says:

Thanks to the heroic efforts of the British Army, assisted by the Allies, the enemy's attempt in the west is being checked. But if we are to prevent the menace spreading to the east and gradually engulfing the world, every lover of freedom and of law must play his part.

'We Need All the Ground We Can Gain To Bury Our Dead,' Says Prisoner

Germans Losing Heavily in Local Efforts to Improve Their Position—Difficult to Move Their Big Guns Over Old Battlefield.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS, Sunday, April 7.—Since the heavy fights on Friday, when the enemy made a series of vain attacks against the British north of Albert, there has been no battle, and it seems likely to me that the Germans are still struggling hard to get their guns, especially the heavy guns, further forward and to completely reorganize their divisions before attempting another drive on a big scale.

This may come soon now, for they have still large concentrations of troops north and south of the Somme, and they are not being kept there for a rest cure.

They have no peace or quiet there, for they are under a harassing fire, and along the valley of the Ancre, above Albert, in that stinking ditch between Bouzincourt and Aveluy and Mesnil and Thiepval, where foul waterholes stagnate below rows of dead, lopped trees and frightful smells arise from the relics of battles two weeks ago, their men are very wretched.

Here in this valley of death, for it was that, and behind in the old fields of the Somme, the German troops have no cover from storms of shell fire, and wherever they move they are seen by the British observers on the high ground on the side of the valley, and shot at by the field artillery or machine guns.

Difficult to Move the Guns.

Woods and valleys behind have old familiar scenes, like Logeast Wood, Nightingale Wood, Pike Wood and Pigeon Copse, which bring back to us who know them many memories of adventure, tragedy and gallant men, are now stuffed with German guns, but they are immobile there because of the bad ground about them, and the enemy covets very much the side of the Ancre Valley, so that he can get to good ground before starting the big attack.

His efforts on Friday last were entirely for this purpose. The objective of his assault troops was that high ground around Bouzincourt and Auchonvillers, and to get those heights he brought up four fresh divisions, with orders to drive the British back at all costs from those places. They failed most miserably, losing large numbers of men and hardly making any headway anywhere.

As I have already said their only gain was to thrust out a small salient opposite Dernancourt, where British batteries brought a searching fire to bear down streets packed with men, and in the low-lying ground nearby where they are in camps and huts.

The attack on the railway embankment there was made by an infantry reserve regiment who were billeted in cellars in the village of Meaulte, which was one of the British assembly places during the battles of the Somme. Then on the night before the attack they moved forward to Dernencourt, where our shell fire made a hell in the streets, and next morning crept out to their position for the assault. One battalion was swept on the left flank by British machine-gun fire, but a battalion on the north fared better, and was able to seize some ground, from which they were driven later by a counter-attack which they had not expected.

Two Companies of 260, Now 70.

As showing the high percentage of German losses it is known that two companies who took part in this attack, numbering about 260 men, are now down to a strength of 70.

British machine gunners did deadly work. I know of one machine gun which fired 3,000 rounds into waves of the enemy and could not miss these living targets.

The enemy's attack that day between Hebuterne and Mesnil, which failed completely in spite of a heavy barrage fire reaching behind the British lines, coincided with an attack made by the British between Hebuterne and Rossignol or Nightingale Wood, where they advanced on a front of 500 yards, and took some prisoners, though the enemy was defending his lines in great force.

German troops attacked toward Bouzincourt eight times on Friday last, and were repulsed each time with tragic losses to themselves which add to the number of dead already lying thick among the lifeless trees of Aveluy Wood.

During all this recent fighting the German divisions have lost a high number of officers and noncommissioned officers. The former used to drive rather than lead their men, and used to remain behind in dugouts while the infantry went forward. Now in this later fighting they appear to be taking part in the advance, and suffer casualties accordingly. To fill up the gaps among the noncommissioned officers there was a new combing out of men put back because of wounds or age.

There is always a tendency to exaggerate the losses of the enemy in order to comfort public opinion and balance accounts, and for that reason I always hesitate to give estimates of German losses, but in all this recent fighting the evidence is overwhelming and beyond doubt, and their own prisoners confirm what is said by the British.

A German Officer's Comment.

A German officer, taken in the recapture of Ayette on April 3, when an Adjutant, three company commanders and other officers were caught in cellars by a quick rush of the British assault, said the most tragic thing about the battle for which joybells are being rung in Germany. One of the British officers said to him:

"You gained a good deal of ground lately."

The German officer looked up with haunted eyes and his answer was:

"We shall want all the ground we can get to bury our dead."

AMERICANS REPEL TWO ENEMY RAIDS

Wait for Box Barrage to Lift and Then Quit Shelters to Drive Off Foe.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, April 7. (Associated Press.)—Two German raids on different sectors of the American position northwest of Toul were repulsed this morning with enemy casualties. The Germans were driven off before reaching the American trenches by accurate machine gun and automatic fire.

At one point the Germans laid down a box barrage. As soon as this lifted, the Americans came up from their shelters and poured a heavy fire into the advancing raiders, who retired after a short period of close fighting with the American outposts.

At another point the Germans threw hundreds of gas shells before advancing, but the Americans quickly donned their gas masks and waited for the raiders. These they quickly dispersed by their fire.

TURKS TAKE ARDAHAN FROM ARMENIAN FORCES

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 6, (via London, April 7.)—Turkish troops are advancing over a wide front in the Caucasus, says an official statement issued today by the Turkish War Office, virtually all of Turkish Armenia having been cleared of the Russians. After violent fighting, the announcement says, the Turks occupied Ardahan and positions west of Sarikamish, Russian towns in Transcaucasia, and they crossed the ancient Russo-Turkish frontier in the direction of Batum on the Black Sea.

AVELUY IS BRITISH AGAIN

Haig's Men Recapture Wood North of Albert, Taking 120 Prisoners.

CHECK ENEMY AT BUCQUOY

And Break Up Attacks Near Albert and Hebuterne by Artillery Fire.

SUCCESS SOUTH OF SOMME

In Sharp Local Engagements Germans Lose Many Men and Several Machine Guns.

LONDON, April 7.—There was no resumption today of the heavy fighting along the British front. The Germans, according to the report from Field Marshal Haig's headquarters tonight, started two attacks at Bucquoy, (half way between Arras and Albert,) but were repulsed.

South of the Somme, British troops were successful today in sharp local engagements. The Germans lost heavily in counterattacks. More than 140 prisoners and several machine guns were taken by the British in these encounters.

Yesterday the British retook positions in Aveluy Wood, [just north of Albert,] capturing more than 120 prisoners and a few machine guns. German attacks opposite Albert and south of Hebuterne [on the same front] broke down under the British artillery fire. [The official report from Berlin notes fighting in this region, asserting that the British attacks "collapsed."]

The text of the British night bulletin follows:

Successful minor operations undertaken by us this morning south of the Somme led to sharp local fighting. The enemy counterattacked strongly in an attempt to regain his former positions, and suffered heavy losses. The number of German prisoners taken has increased to over 140. Several machine guns also were captured.

This morning the enemy made two attempts to deliver attacks against our position at Bucquoy, but in each case his troops were stopped and dispersed by our artillery fire.

On the remainder of the battle-front the day passed more quietly.

Following is the day statement from British Headquarters:

Counterattacks carried out by us yesterday successfully re-established our former positions in Aveluy Wood and resulted in the capture of over 120 prisoners and several machine guns.

Later in the day the enemy again attacked our position opposite Albert, but was repulsed, and another attack attempted early in the night south of Hebuterne was completely broken up by our artillery fire.

By a successful minor operation carried out by us early this morning south of the River Somme we improved our position and captured forty prisoners.

CHECK GERMANS AT HANGARD.

French Repulse Attacks There—Fighting on the Oise Front.

PARIS, April 7.—Attempts by the Germans to make gains against the French troops in the region of Hangard-en-Santerre ten miles southeast of Amiens today were blocked, according to the official communication issued tonight. The French artillery took under its fire German troops at various points north of Montdidier.

A strong attack by the Germans in the region of Hill 344, in the Verdun sector, was repulsed.

The text of the night statement reads:

Our artillery checked attempts of the enemy to attack in the region of Hangard-en-Santerre and took under its fire troop concentrations at various points on the front north of Montdidier.

On the right bank of the Meuse a strong German attack northeast of Hill 344 was repulsed after a spirited engagement, the enemy suffering serious losses and leaving in our hands about twenty prisoners, three of them officers.

Raids against our small posts in the Argonne and in the sector of Vauxles-Palameix brought no result.

On April 6 seven German airplanes and two captive balloons were brought down by our pilots. Our bombers dropped 3,000 kilos of projectiles on enemy stations and cantonments.

The Germans last night renewed their attacks on the French positions in the region of Chauny and Barisis, on the Oise front, in which sector the French earlier in the day had withdrawn to prepared positions, the War Office announced this afternoon. West of Noyon a German detachment which had gained a foothold in the advanced French line was ejected by a counterattack.

The text of the afternoon statement reads:

Last evening the French repulsed a German attack in the region of Grivesnes.

In the course of the night the artillery of both sides displayed great activity between Montdidier and Noyon.

West of Noyon a German detachment which had succeeded in gaining a foothold in the advanced French trenches was immediately ejected by a counterattack.

On the Oise front the Germans renewed their assaults in the region of Chauny and Barisis.

A German attempt to raid the French lines north of the Chemin des Dames was unsuccessful.

Rheims was violently bombarded in the course of the night.

EXPECTS ANOTHER BIG PUSH.

British Correspondent Thinks the Somme Fighting Indicates One.

LONDON, April 7.—Reuter's correspondent at British Headquarters in France, telegraphing Sunday, says there are signs that the enemy is about to thrust again on a big scale. The fighting north of the Somme during the past few days, says the correspondent, apparently all has been directed by the enemy at affecting an improvement of his positions and possibly to secure a better "jumping-off place."

Between Mesnil and Bucquoy, says the correspondent, the ground the Germans now occupy is very unfavorable to artillery movement should a big push develop, and only by such a movement could a great concentrated attack upon Amiens be carried out.

DOWN 13 GERMAN MACHINES.

British Disable 11 More — 16 of Haig's Airplanes Missing.

LONDON, April 7.—Thirteen airplanes were brought down in fighting with British airmen Saturday, eleven others were disabled, and two were shot down by anti-aircraft guns, according to the British aviation communication issued this evening.

Sixteen British machines which were sent out have not yet been accounted for, but many of them are thought possibly to have been forced to make landings inside their own lines in the prevailing bad weather.

The text of the communication says:

About noon Saturday our machines, watching the enemy's movements on the battle front, reported a concentration of hostile troops south of the Somme. Large formations of our airplanes issued immediately in the rain and dropped more than 500 bombs on the enemy's assembled infantry, in addition to firing some 50,000 rounds at them with machine guns.

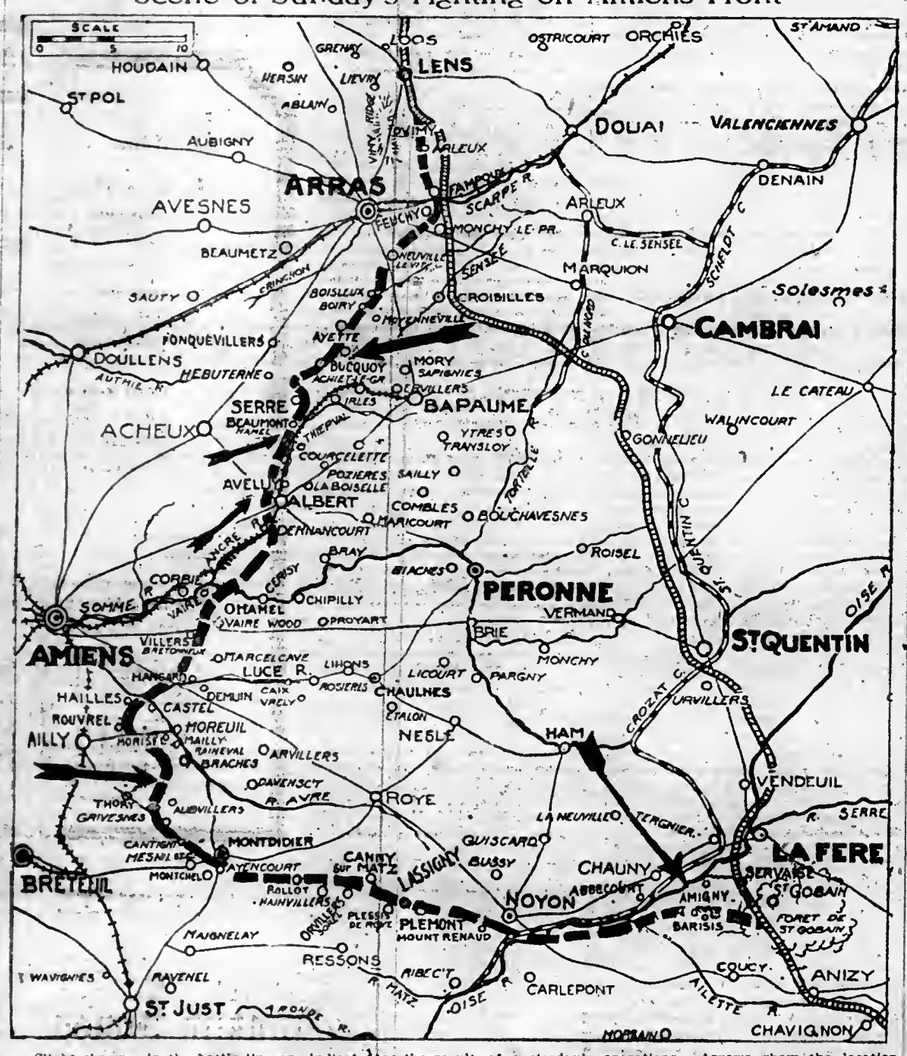
In air fighting thirteen hostile machines were brought down and eleven others disabled. Two German machines also were shot down by anti-aircraft guns. Sixteen of our machines have not yet been located. Many of these undoubtedly made forced landings behind our lines, owing to the difficulty of finding their airdromes in the heavy rain.

Throughout the present battle the Canadian air force has done valuable work.

Army Calls for 100 Photographers.

The Adjutant General has issued a call for one hundred photographers having either amateur or professional experience and who are in the draft. These men are requested to report immediately to Local Board 135 at 302 Fulton street, Jamaica, so that they can be voluntarily inducted and sent to camp not later than April 15th. The duty is one of the most desirable in the army and it is believed that the call will be met with quick responses.

Scene of Sunday's Fighting on Amiens Front



Slight changes in the battle line are indicated as the result of yesterday's operations. Arrows show the location and direction of the principal efforts made by the combatants. Late reports from Berlin told of the extension about two miles to the south of gains made in Saturday's attack on the French lines south of the Oise in the neighborhood of Chauny. The French made a number of attacks west of the Montdidier-Moreuil line. The British have recovered Aveluy and have thrown the Germans back south of Hebuterne, and the Germans made two strong attacks on Bucquoy, of which Haig's bulletin reports the repulse.

BERLIN SAYS WILSON SHOWS TEUTON PERIL

ernment. Behind the Chancellor, who was read to accept in vague and uncertain terms the American principles, behind Kühlmann, who asserted at Brest-Litovsk the right of peoples to dispose of themselves, Wilson shows the real masters of Germany, the military chiefs who laugh at all principles and all rights."

The Wilson speech, The Temps adds, will bring before the eyes of Europe a vision of the powerful gathering of new strength represented by the American Army, which is both comforting for the soldiers in Picardy and troubling for the German military leaders.

The battle of Picardy, The Journal des Débats points out, has brought about unity of command. The paper continues:

Now that unity of command is accomplished, the next thing is to realize simultaneousness of action. This is the task of our American Allies, who are pressing forward their preparations to that end. The quicker they are in coming to take part in the battle's decision the more they will justify the closing words of Wilson's vibrant response to the President of the French Republic: "The sons of America will justify their full share of pride in the final victory."

"Declares War to a Finish."

PARIS, April 7.—All the Paris newspapers give a prominent place to President Wilson's Baltimore speech, the majority of them printing it in full, others giving long extracts with much favorable comment.

Le Matin says that a year ago the President declared war and today he declares war to a finish.

Gaulois, referring to the evolution of President Wilson, says:

"Don't worry, but hurry. We can hold the flood now, but the help of American bayonets will be needed to break Germany's power."

Excelsior says that President Wilson's speech is plain, categoric, imperious, and that millions of men in addition to the thousands already here are coming to reinforce it.

The Petit Parisien says:

"What a contrast between the loyal, limpid words of President Wilson and the stilted, embarrassed and halting phrases of Count Czernin!"

CORDIAL TO H. P. DAVISON.

All Italy Honors America's Services in His Person.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, April 6. (Delayed.)—H. P. Davison has had a most enthusiastic reception in Italy. Every one, from Cabinet Ministers down to the humblest citizens, who have learned to love America as the best friend of Italy, has tried to make him understand that the expressions of welcome and affection addressed to him were not limited to the Red Cross, but extended to the whole American nation, especially to the army and navy, whose representatives, it is hoped, will soon be seen in Italy. When it became known that Mr. Davison was about to visit several provinces of the north, centre, and south of Italy, a great flood of inquiries as to his itinerary was received by officials from individuals and associations desirous of expressing to him their gratitude for American sympathy and assistance.

TURKS TAKE ARDAHAN FROM ARMENIAN FORCES

Constantinople Reports Advance Over Wide Front in the Caucasus Region.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 6. (via London, April 7.)—Turkish troops are advancing over a wide front in the Caucasus, says an official statement issued today by the Turkish War Office, virtually all of Turkish Armenia having been cleared of the Russians. After violent fighting, the announcement says, the Turks occupied Ardahan and positions west of Sarikamish, Russian towns in Transcaucasia, and they crossed the ancient Russo-Turkish frontier in the direction of Batum on the Black Sea. The text reads:

Caucasus—Our troops continued their forward march on a wide front. As the result of violent fighting they occupied the locality of Ardjish, on the northern shore of Lake Van and carried by assault strong advanced positions west of Sarikamish. We occupied Ardahan, capturing 34 mortars and a quantity of munitions.

On the shore of the Black Sea our troops crossed the ancient frontier in the direction of Batum.

Officials of an Armenian organization in this city have received a cable message by way of France from the headquarters of the Armenian and Georgian Armies who have recaptured Batum and Erzerum, asking for immediate and generous support from the Allies to enable them to carry on the war against the Turks in the Caucasus and Armenia, which has been abandoned by the Trotsky-Lenine Government of Russia.

The regular Armenian-Georgian Army, including Russians who have chosen to continue the fight, amounts to 250,000, according to the dispatch, and has been augmented by 25,000 new Armenian volunteers. This army, it is stated in the dispatch, is still well equipped, possessing the artillery, small arms, and munitions which belonged to the army when it was commanded by the Grand Duke Nicholas. Armenian factories are keeping up the supply of munitions. Food, however, according to the cablegram, is short, but can be obtained in sufficient quantities,—provided that money is furnished by the Allies, as the army controls the roads into Persia.

mation and in no way connected with diplomacy. French officialdom, in fact, while seeing no occasion for anything in the way of diplomatic "conversations," could not in its own interest neglect the opportunity of gaining information through an interview with an enemy representative.

That was exactly the position of Major Armand, the French representative in the matter, and this view places what occurred in its true light.

Armand is a son of Count Armand, who possesses important industrial interests in France and has a large estate at Fribourg. He is also related to members of the Austrian nobility. He was consequently in a position to play admirably the rôle which Clemenceau allotted to him, which was to "listen and say nothing." Undoubtedly he had no political authority whatever.

Hurlburt Success In the Home Market

Only a motor truck built to last, and an organization ready to face the music, can afford to tackle the home market.

It is significant, therefore, that the Hurlburt truck, made in New York, first established its supremacy here.

Quality-built and honestly backed, the Hurlburt went into competition with the world's best and by sheer merit won its dominating position in the metropolitan district.

Then its prestige spread, of course, but that's another story.

What interests you is that you can buy a truck of the Hurlburt reputation in a factory so located that it is able to give you direct co-operation when you need it.

German Papers, Discussing Anniversary of America's Entry, Say Effect Is Small.

BUT DOUBT GERMAN WISDOM

In Dragging Us In—One Laments Failure to Prevent Re-election of President Wilson.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

THE HAGUE, April 6.—Late issues of German newspapers received here contain as a rule articles on the first anniversary of the entry of the United States into the war.

The annexationist journal, the Weser Zeitung, remarking that, in the year that has elapsed, Germany has had time to assess the real value of America's help, deplores the fact that there are still people in Germany and the Dual Monarchy who are influenced by the American press's unceasing war propaganda and says some who "are invulnerable to this lend a willing ear to phrases about democracy and the happiness of humanity, as Czernin did in his last speech."

The paper says America certainly has had her hands full with the necessary organization during the last year and gives what purport to be detailed accounts of the American Army, and its growth, asserting that the pressing question at present is transportation. The assertion is made that America's help to the Allies up to the present has not been of much consequence.

The article says President Wilson kept his troops far away from the decisive battle in Flanders, Artois, the Aisne and Champagne and before Verdun "after General Pershing had recognized the impossibility of the Entente breaking through in the West, and so informed Washington. At the end of last year an American report said that a few American troops were on a quiet part of the front, and soon after this our troops took American prisoners between Toul and Verdun."

The Germans, according to this authority, no longer believe in the Americans' chief weapon, bluff, and it is asserted that, "America shares the same fate as Italy and Rumania. She cannot wrest the final victory from us."

George Bartholme, ex-Washington correspondent of The Kölnische Zeitung, who never loses an opportunity to display his alleged knowledge of events in Washington and New York preceding the declaration of war by the United States, declares that President Wilson's son, who he says is a minister of the church, [President Wilson has no son,] sent an emissary to Washington to present the signing of the declaration of war and relates how the emissary returned radiant, and how Senator Stone read of the declaration that same afternoon in a newspaper and put his head in his hands and wept bitterly. The writer declares that he was assured that, had Congress had five days more and been able to decide quietly and without pressure from the White House, things would have been otherwise. Bartholme says William Stone is the one man in America who should have been kept informed, but was lied to by the President, and concludes:

"Wilson's fate is a matter of indifference to us. America will learn with experience, and history will show her place, which will not be one of honor."

Beginning to Have Doubts.

AMSTERDAM, April 8, (Associated Press.)—Many of the German newspapers received here discussing the anniversary of the entry of the United States into the war indulge in speculation regarding the wisdom of dragging America into the conflict against Germany, and some come to the conclusion that it was unwise to array the United States against the Fatherland.

The Tägliche Rundschau says Germany lost her last chance to keep the United States out when she "failed to prevent President Wilson's re-election because of his anti-German leanings."

"But," says the newspaper, "it is well to remember that Mr. Wilson will soon come forward with another peace proposition."

The Kreuz-Keitung says: "The U-boat was a useful pretext for America to enter the war, and we supplied it. It enabled President Wilson effectually to conceal his true war motives. We thoroughly misread American sentiment."

The Berliner Tageblatt refuses to believe American help can bring victory to the Entente. Continuing, it says:

"America's economic assistance has now passed its zenith. The seizures of German, Austro-Hungarian, Dutch, and Swedish shipping, aggregating 2,000,000 tons, constitutes the Entente's last reserves, which in three months probably will be disposed of by our U-boats. Then the Entente will be faced with the final question whether new construction can keep pace with the losses by U-boats."

The Weser Zeitung says America has fallen short of the Entente's expectations and cannot fulfill them.

The War Situation

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

The battle of Picardy is fast taking on the aspect of the battle of Verdun. At Verdun there was the first great rush when the French were thrust back upon the defenses of Fort Douaumont. Then came a series of heavy blows which resulted in the capture of this fort and the establishing of a new line near Fort Vaux. After that, on both banks of the Meuse, there was a repetition of the process we have become so familiar with through the various battles on the western front. A heavy artillery bombardment announces the point of the attack. This bombardment is followed by infantry charges which carry the lines forward a few hundred yards or not at all. Then there is another period of relative inactivity, a period of accumulation of ammunition for another attack, after which the same process is repeated. This is continued as long as the men hold out. When the losses begin to get too great the attacks cease. This automatically divides such an offensive into two phases.

The first phase of the battle of Picardy ended over a week ago. It is the second phase which has been in progress during the last eight days. The Germans are gaining steadily. A few hundred yards here today, another few hundred there tomorrow. Then a third attack between the two which straightens out the line and brings it abreast of the advance of the first two days. Then they begin over again and do exactly the same thing.

It is grueling work, and in the case of the Germans terribly costly. They are using great numbers of men. The attacking waves are thicker than have been used on the western front at any time previous to March 21. On Friday nearly two hundred thousand men were used against the French on a front not more than ten miles long. On Saturday nearly one hundred and fifty thousand men were used against the British on a front of about the same length. This means more than eleven men to the yard in the first case and more than nine men per yard in the second. Where troops are attacking with that thickness against an unshaken enemy, well equipped with machine guns and probably better equipped with artillery and shell, the losses are as a matter of course excessive. The Germans are therefore paying a heavy price for every yard of ground they are taking, heavier than they did at Dead Man's Hill in the fight for Verdun two years ago.

Up to the present time the Allies have made no attempt to counterattack except in a purely local way. These local engagements have been bitterly fought, but without any other objective than to improve a local imperfection in the line. They do not therefore affect the general result. On the contrary, the Allies seem to want the Germans to continue their attacks, knowing that the more the Germans do attack the greater will be the relative losses. This is the only thing which can explain the feeling of positive security which seems to pervade both the British and the French high commands. The fighting of the last twenty-four hours seems to justify this confidence.

The last great German attack was delivered on a section of the front not yet affected by the Picardy battle. It was located southeast of La Fère, where the old French line joins up with the new line which was formed through the exigencies arising out of the German attacks in March. After a heavy bombardment the Germans struck the French lines on the south bank of the Oise near Barisis. The result was negligible. The line was hardly changed appreciably, although the attack was in considerable force.

There may have been any one of several reasons for the attack at this point. Directly, it has nothing to do with the battle of Picardy at all, and even had the Germans been successful in their effort the situation about the Avre and the Luce Rivers would not have been changed in the slightest degree. On the other hand, the German attacks between Montdidier and Moreuil, made for the purpose of widening the salient at the former place, have of late been badly broken up before they really started. The French expect attacks here, and are always ready for them. Recent developments, too, indicate that the French are present in very considerable force on this section of the front.

The idea, then, may have been to draw men to the Barisis sector from the main front and then to smash in at the apex of the salient before they had an opportunity to return. But the Allies do not seem to be as short of men as all that. Without giving way at Montdidier at all, they repulsed the attacks along the Oise and restored quiet.

Another consideration is that the Germans were anticipating a counteroffensive at this point and therefore struck first. Such a move would have the effect of delaying the movement or of stopping it altogether. Whatever the motive may have been, however, it is a confession of failure in the more vital sectors to have made the attack at all. Germany has a great many men at her command, but she has not enough to carry on the work between the Somme and the Avre and at the same time to fritter away strength in other quarters. That she found it necessary to shift the point of attack at all indicates that things are not going well in the chosen field.

Germany is far behind her schedule now. She was to have been in Paris by the first of April, if we may believe the statement of Hindenburg, and she is far from being within striking distance yet of the French capital. As each day passes, the chances of Germany ever getting there grow smaller and smaller.

Not only are things going none too well on the vital sector between Montdidier and the Luce River—and this is the sector where the Germans are nearest Amiens—but in the north, where Germany must advance her lines if she wishes to avoid extreme danger, the situation is equally bad. The British are holding fast against attacks as heavy as those directed against the French. The British positions about Albert are absolutely steady, while along the Somme the advance is slow and very costly. The confidence of the allied leaders is not difficult to understand.

Constant Superiority of Allied Aircraft a Factor in Inspiring French Confidence.

By G. H. PERRIS.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, Sunday, April 7.—A resumption of last week's effort may be expected of the enemy at any moment, and may have begun before these lines reach the reader. He has now thrown into this desperate adventure nearly, if not quite, 100 of the 200 divisions which he had either in the trenches or in reserve to hold 400 miles of the western front. Many of those 100 divisions are being or will be reformed and thrown in again.

The end is not in sight, is perhaps not near; but if I say that it is certain I only reflect the confidence of the French Army, in which, whether among officers or men, I cannot find anything but complete assurance. Men who have been continuously engaged for the greater part of the battle and have now been relieved speak of the boche in what one may call a tone of sober superiority. They have few of the scornful epithets of the home-staying club man to apply to him. They recognize his remarkable discipline, his readiness for death, and his powers of organization, but they believe that as a man or a soldier the poilu has the stronger combination of virtues, and very simply they point to facts to justify their belief.

On the ten miles of front from Thennes on the Avre to Griveanes twelve divisions, including all that was available of the Prussian Guard and several other of the best formations in the Imperial armies, were hurled against the French positions, wave after wave charging shoulder to shoulder in a sort of human avalanche. Four French divisions had to withstand this shock, and one man against three they withstood it. A mile or two of ground had to be yielded at Mailly, Raineval, and Morisel, some of which has been recovered by counterattacks, but nowhere was the line broken or anything important lost. In parts of the action, as in the earlier stages of the battle, the odds were still less favorable.

The general result is, as General Foch has stated it: "The enemy is arrested."

Among the reasons for this preliminary success nothing compares with the individual heroism of all ranks. After that must be counted the constant superiority of allied aviation and its bold entry into the heart of the fray, the growing superiority of the French artillery particularly marked in the barrages of the French field guns; the fact that, after the beginning of the retreat, the French were always able to take up the best positions; the fact that they were always falling back on good lines of communication, while the enemy was lengthening his through a devastated region, and the admirable services of the French railway and motor transport.

I say nothing for the moment of the work of the higher and lower commands. That will be best seen in the sequel, when the story can be told as it cannot be today.

ANARCHY ON RUSSIAN SHIPS

Correspondent Describes Visit to the Fleet at Helsingfors.

LONDON, March 15, (Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—Discipline in the Russian Navy had been destroyed even before the Kerensky Government at Petrograd was overthrown by the Bolsheviki, writes a Helsingfors correspondent of The Observer. The sailors on some of the warships had organized "ship's committees," which decided in many cases whether the orders of the Captains should be obeyed. Through these committees the sailors subjected their superiors to humiliation by refusing permission for them to leave the ships or annulling their orders.

Describing his visit to a Russian battleship at Helsingfors, the correspondent wrote:

"I found dirt and squalor almost as bad as in Petrograd. The decks had not seen water or a broom for a long time. Everything one touched was dirty, black and grimy, and the whole aspect aboard ship was one of desolation and despondency. The sailors, free from all restraint and discipline, wore a sullen, sulky look. My host, the commanding officer, explained this delicate position as regarded the ship's committee, and the care and tact that were required before issuing any order to the men in order to avoid the possibility of its being disobeyed or annulled, with consequent loss of prestige.

"One of the malcontents in the crew told an officer one afternoon that the ship's committee had passed a resolution to murder the Captain and another officer. The officers set a guard around the Captain's quarters, but the plan of the ship's committee was negatived by the receipt during the evening of the news that the Bolsheviki had overthrown Kerensky in Petrograd, this news being accompanied by a telegram ordering that no life was to be taken in the fleet until further orders had been received from Bolshevist headquarters.

"The constant humiliation to which the officers of the warships were subjected by their ship's committees knew no bounds. Many of the men delighted in their newly acquired power and experimented with it as a child with a new top. Others used their position to pay back fancied grudges by subjecting their former superiors to constant minor indignities. In one case an officer of high rank wanted a boat to go over to another ship. The request, which had to be made in writing to the committee, was refused, as the men had decided only to run the boats on specified regular trips at regular hours."

STEEL PLANT EXPLOSION.

Baltimore Shaken by Blow-up at Sparrow's Point Works.

BALTIMORE, Md., April 7.—The entire city was shaken about 1 o'clock this morning by a terrific explosion at the Bethlehem Steel Company's plant at Sparrow's Point.

In the southern section hundreds of persons, aroused by the noise and terrified by the effects of the shock, rushed from their homes.

The officials of the company have refused to divulge the extent of damage or cause of the blowup.

OIL HELD FOR THE ALLIES.

Diaz Troops Control Wells by Defeating Carranza Forces.

Among those who arrived yesterday on a steamship from Brazil was Alfred A. Smith of this city, a representative of the American Seed Tape Company of Newark. He said that the raw rubber market of Northern Brazil is overstocked because of the inability to ship the product, and as a consequence prices are low.

Another passenger was an oil man from Tampico, who said that in a recent battle between the forces of Carranza and those of Diaz under General Pelaez the Government troops were defeated and the Diaz forces hold possession of the oil fields. He added that it was as well they did, for the Carranza Government is pro-German and might divert the oil from the Allies. Yucatan is now a slackers' refuge, according to some of the passengers who had visited there. Most of the slackers are Socialists, and they have been warmly welcomed by the Socialist element there.

ITALY SENDS GREETING.

Wireless on War Anniversary Transmitted to Wilson by Marconi.

ROME, April 7.—Guglielmo Marconi today sent to President Wilson by wireless telegraphy a message expressing the sentiment of a great meeting, representing the entire population of Rome, which today celebrated the anniversary of America's entry into the war. The message reads:

"On this auspicious occasion I have been granted the distinguished honor of expressing by means of this message, transmitted through the free ways of space, the sentiments of sincere friendship and close solidarity binding the Italian people to the people of the United States, and of conveying to you our sense of deep admiration for your initiative, which was inspired by the same principles that made Rome great, and that now are strengthening our faith in the triumph of justice and civilization."

Q. What is an Inheritance Tax?

A. It is a tax upon the right to receive property under a Will or through the death of a person who leaves no Will. In the State of New York a tax is assessed upon each separate bequest, not upon the estate as a whole. The amount of the tax depends upon the beneficiary's relationship to the decedent and on the amount of the inheritance. The Federal Government also imposes a tax upon the transfer of all estates in excess of $50,000.

AGAINST an enemy who has neither respect for human liberty nor reverence for God, who makes war on defenceless mothers and butchers little children for a German holiday, who strikes down the aged and the infirm, the maimed and the sick, who makes a shambles of sleep and a slaughterhouse of prayer, who tramples under-foot the right of nations to live and exalts the harvest of the sword, who plunders in the name of defence and kills in the name of the Divinity, who blasphemes of victory one hour and whines like a cur for peace the next, who dispenses iron crosses for murder on the field of ten million crucifixions and chants a requiem of hate over Freedom's dead—against such an enemy there can be only two alternatives—either we must lay down The Price of Victory or We Must Lay Down Our Arms!

AMERICANS ACTIVE IN GREAT BATTLE

War Department Says Several Transport Sections Have Been Engaged.

SITUATION STILL UNCERTAIN

German Offensive Not Spent, but Still Far Short of Attaining Its Principal Objectives.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—In its weekly review of the war situation in Europe, the War Department tonight authorized the statement that a number of American transport sections had taken an active part in the great battle in Picardy, and that the American aviation service "is co-operating with the British."

The statement confirms press reports from France that American forces in France have also taken up a new position in the line and are occupying well-prepared intrenchments along the Meuse hills south of Verdun.

According to the War Department view as pictured in this weekly summary it was the purpose of the German high command in the great battle which has been in progress nearly three weeks to "achieve a decision in the field in the course of one great battle," but that the success of the plan involved making a clean break through the British line and driving a wedge into the Franco-British forces. It is observed that "the enemy is still far short of attaining his principal objectives." Although the stubbornness of the resistance with which the German advance was opposed and the severity of the casualties sustained by the enemy, according to the War Department, have compelled the Germans to draw more heavily than they had expected on their reserves, the War Department statement contains a warning that the German offensive has not spent itself, and that "the situation will continue uncertain for some time to come."

"At the opening of the third week of the German offensive," the statement says, "we find that the enemy is still far short of attaining his principal objectives. It is now evident that the German high command contemplated overwhelming the British at the outset, between the Oise and the Sensée, and driving a wedge into the Franco-British forces. The enemy fully expected to achieve a decision in the field in the course of one great battle.

"The success of this plan depended on being able to obtain a break-through of the British front and advance so rapidly that neither the French nor the British reserves could come up in time to close up the breach in the line and restore the order of battle.

"Evidence of prisoners tends to confirm that the enemy hoped to gain the line of the Somme by the evening of the first day of the offensive. As a matter of fact, it took the Germans ten days to cover the ground they expected to overrun within forty-eight hours. The stubbornness of British resistance and the severe casualties inflicted by them compelled the Germans to draw more heavily than they anticipated on their own reserves.

"The German high command is now throwing fresh forces into battle in an effort to secure some of its more limited objectives.

"Under the leadership of General Foch the allied military machine is functioning with precise smoothness, insuring greatest economy, harmony and efficiency in the use of all of the forces now united in stemming the German assault. The morale of the allied troops remains high.

"The German offensive has not spent itself, and, owing to the determination displayed by the enemy to gain some sort of a success at no matter what cost, the situation will continue uncertain for some time to come.

"However, the general strategic and tactical position of the Allies is becoming more favorable.

"After a period of relative calm early in the week, during which the enemy was busy bringing up his heavy guns and repairing the wastage of battle by replacing tired units by fresh troops, another powerful attack was launched along the segment of the line now held by the French, stretching from the Amiens-Roye road to Grivesnes. The enemy was able to make slight headway and crossed the Avre, opposite Moreuil, occupying Morisel. Fierce fighting continues, and hostile units have penetrated westward to within five miles of the main line of the Paris-Amiens Railway.

"Allied forces are massed to check the invaders in this area. The French have extended their lines northward, which will enable the British to secure greater depth of concentration.

"There has been relatively less activity north of the Somme, though the Germans have made a number of serious attempts to encircle Arras. All attacks in this sector have been beaten off by the British, and the important Arras defenses hold firm in spite of all the efforts made by the enemy to weaken the British line in this region.

"Allied aircraft have been particularly active throughout the week, not only in maintaining superiority in the air and keeping the skies clear of hostile craft, but more especially in bombing enemy dumps, convoys, trains, and railheads. British escadrilles did fine work in dispersing German units going into action with machine guns.

"A number of American transport sections have taken an active part in the battle, and the American aviation service is co-operating with the British.

"There was no unusual activity along other sectors in the west. An intensification of hostile bombardment in the vicinity of Passchendaele is noted.

"Our own forces engaged have been relatively busy. Under the cover of a heavy barrage, the enemy raided one of our outposts in the Woevre area, and the increase of artillery activity is noted in this sector.

"Our troop units have taken up a new position in the line and are occupying well-prepared intrenchments along the Meuse hills, south of Verdun.

"In the Italian theatre there has been an increase in hostile activity. Lively shelling took place along the Asiago Plateau. Italian batteries effectively broke up enemy parties in various areas.

"Reports continue to be received indicating that the enemy contemplates launching an offensive thrust. The Austrian armies, with the exception of a few units operating in the Ukraine or in the western area, are now in the Italian theatre. It is possible that the enemy will initiate an offensive along a broad front, including the entire northern sector from the upper reaches of the Piave to the Lake of Garda.

"The Secretary of War has concluded a visit to the Italian front."

They Fight Like Victors, Says Poniatowski, in Polish Appeal.

BOSTON, April 7.—"If American soldiers keep on fighting the way I saw them fighting in France two months ago the Germans are as good as whipped," said Prince Stanislas Poniatowski of the Polish War Mission at a mass meeting here today. The meeting was arranged as a public welcome to the members of the mission, who are here to stimulate recruiting in the new "Polish army."

"We want to get our country back," said Prince Poniatowski. "We are going to get it back. When we do the American flag will float next to the Polish flag on the public buildings of Poland."

Lieut. Gov. Coolidge conveyed the State's greeting to the mission and Mayor Peters extended a welcome in behalf of the city.

STEP TO SAFEGUARD LABOR.

Prevention of Loss Sought in Curtailing Capital Issues.

WASHINGTON, April 7.—To minimize local unemployment as a result of curtailing building and capital expenditures, the Federal Reserve Board's Capital Issues Committee has arranged to consult with officials of the American Federation of Labor and the United States Employment Service before acting on any application for issues of securities, the approval or disapproval of which would seriously affect labor conditions.

This assurance was given by the committee after receiving scores of anxious inquiries from carpenters' and builders' unions concerning the policy to be pursued toward enterprises necessary to maintain employment. Frank Morrison, Secretary of the Federation of Labor, and John B. Densmore, director of the Government's employment service, will act as the committee's unofficial advisers. If it appears necessary to prevent construction in certain cases and thereby throw men out of work, special efforts will be made to transfer them to other jobs.

The committee announced that in the week ended April 4 it disposed finally of twenty applications for the issuance of securities aggregating $17,339,000, of which $1,060,000 was disapproved. The issues given approval included $2,580,000 of refunding obligations and $13,706,000 for new issues. The last figure was compared with $66,736,000 new issues floated in the same period last year, before the Government sought to exercise even voluntarily regulation of capital issues.
